

THE 1961 PEAN

YEARBOOK OF

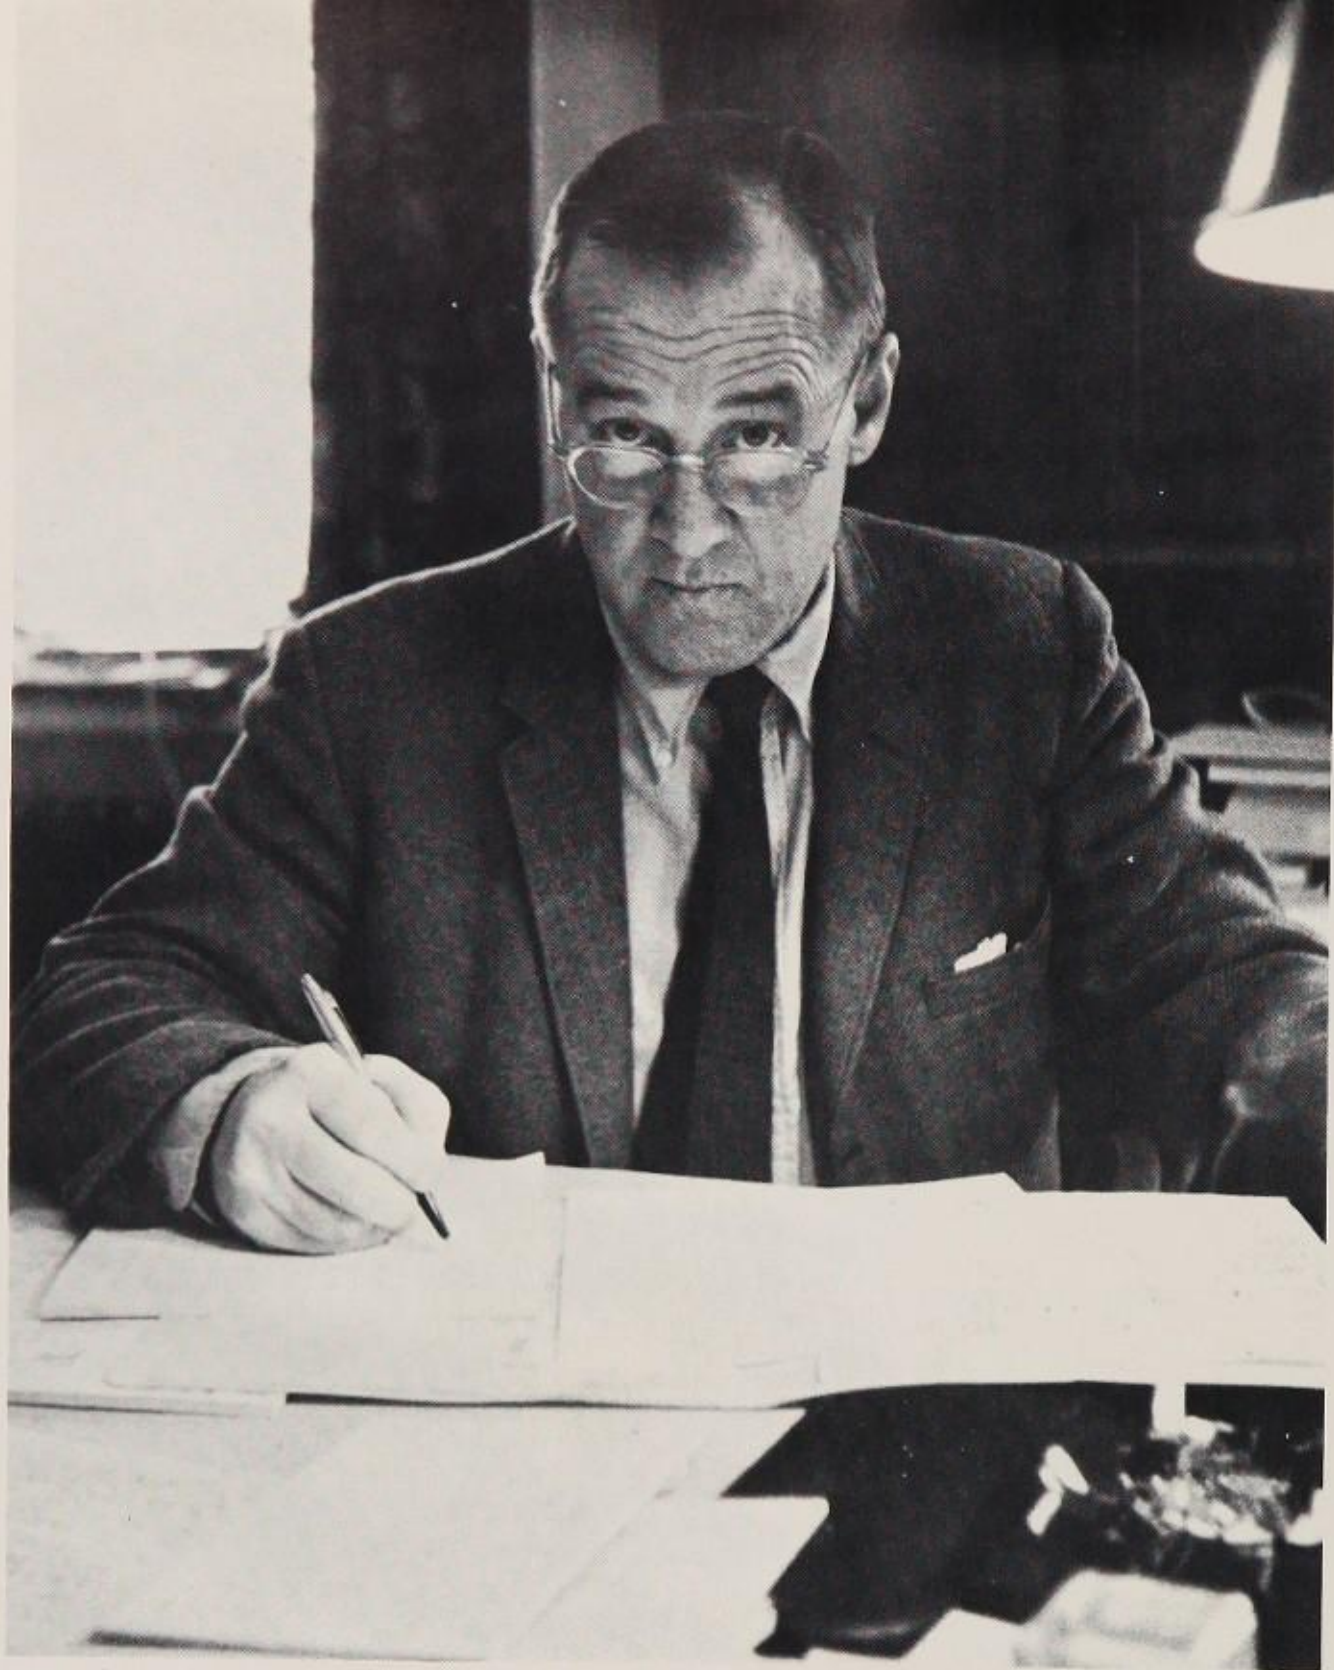

THE PHILLIPS EXETER ACADEMY

VOLUME LXXXI

FOREWORD

At Exeter, students, with few exceptions, lead both their academic and social lives from day to day as corresponding pressures demand. The perspective needed to make the student understand the value of Exeter becomes lost in the routine of school activity. The Exonian is hardly ever aware of the Academy's value until he is an alumnus of a few years. Because it is dubious that any such awareness can be induced at this point, we sincerely hope that as alumni, looking back over this PEAN, the members of the class of 1961 will be stimulated toward an awareness of what they gained here and will be able to extend this awareness to the world as it confronts them.

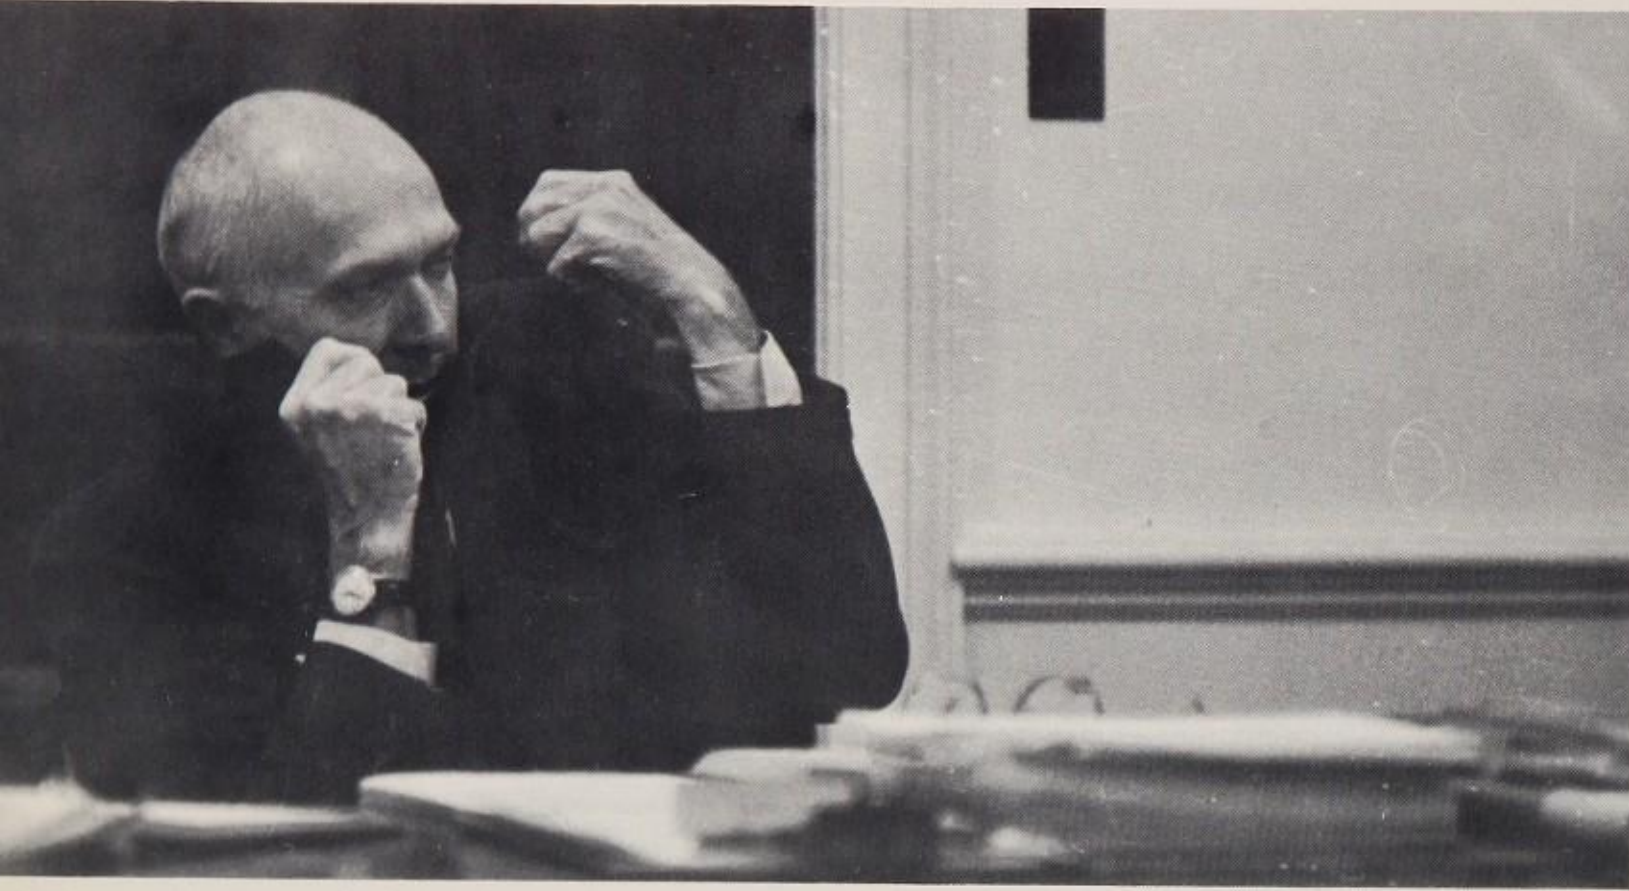

DEDICATION

Dean Robert Wilson Kesler

The 1961 PEAN is dedicated to Dean Robert Wilson Kesler in recognition of his treatment of the student body. He has successfully performed the duties of his difficult position as the instrument of faculty and trustee policy. In every facet of school life, he has gained the respect of all.

RETIRING INSTRUCTORS

Exeter owes a great deal to Martin W. Souders, retiring Director of Physical Education. Mr. Souders came to Exeter in 1930, and since then not only has he developed the Exeter athletic system to its present stage, but he has also been very active in various extra-mural athletic functions. He has served in many capacities outside of his position at Exeter and has been President of the New England Preparatory Schools' Athletic Council. At the Academy, lacrosse is among the many sports he has instituted, while he has elevated the status of other, formerly insignificant sports. He has met individual needs, as was indicated last year with the initiation of the junior sports program. The Academy will always remember Mr. Souders, who has devoted himself so selflessly to the school's athletic department.

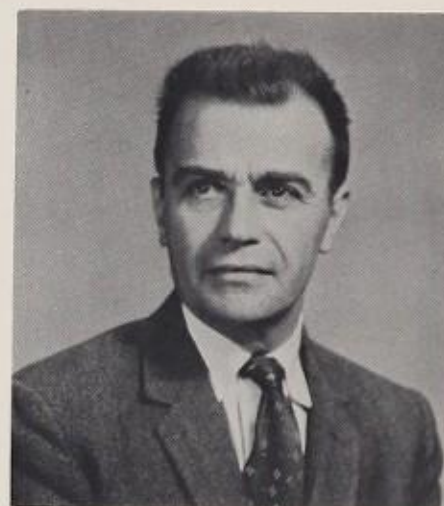

John C. Hogg has done a great deal for science at Exeter. With the advent of the Harkness Plan in 1931, Mr. Hogg was asked to develop the then embryonic science program at Exeter. Through the years as head of the science department and as Harlan Page Amen Professor, he firmly established science courses and brought about many innovations in the means of teaching them. He initiated the successful "Phy Sci" plan by which a year of Physics and a year of Chemistry are integrated into a two year program. He then wrote several accompanying texts. As Mr. Hogg retires, he can be assured that his contribution to Exeter has been of great value.

ACTIVITIES

STUDENT COUNCIL

The Student Council was hampered at the outset by an unfortunate legacy. The insolence of the 1959-60 Council created a double problem. Not only did last year's body alienate most of the faculty, but also its approach toward the many issues handled all but paralyzed future action.

A quieter approach toward important issues was exemplified by the Council's reversal of the faculty decision on unexcused absences. At the end of last year the faculty voted that two unexcused absences incurred "sleeping through" should be punishable by restrictions. A sixman Council committee met with the Executive Committee of the faculty, and, by avoiding polemics, established a policy deliberately vague in definition and subjective in emphasis.

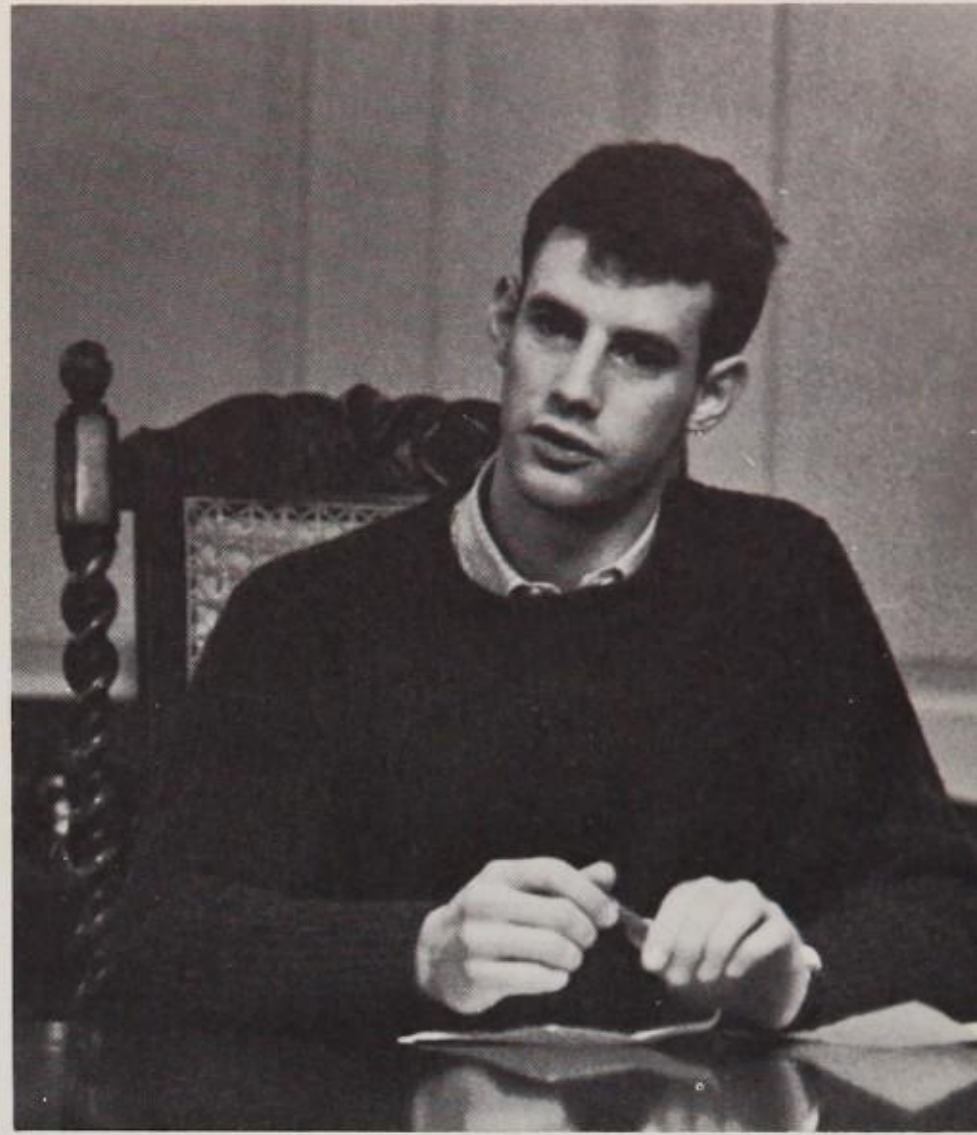

A Fall Dance, the first in fifteen years, was the Council's main project. Harry Marshard's Band played to 95 couples in the Chapel. Five committees worked to decorate, hold a tea dance, sell tickets, provide entertainment, and supply refreshments. The endeavor proved a qualified success. Although the tea dance yielded a profit, the Dance itself was a financial failure.

The Student Service budget initiated a significant departure from the customary selection of charities. Of a proposed goal of $3100, $700 went to travel aid for foreign scholarship students at Exeter. Another $700 went to the American Field Service, an organization sponsoring an exchange program for high school students. The travel aid fund represented Exeter students' first donation to the Exeter scholarship program. Contributions exceeded the budget to reach an all-time high.

A seven-point religion proposal aiming for greater student participation and increased faculty concern for the problems of student morality expressed the Council's constructive outlook.

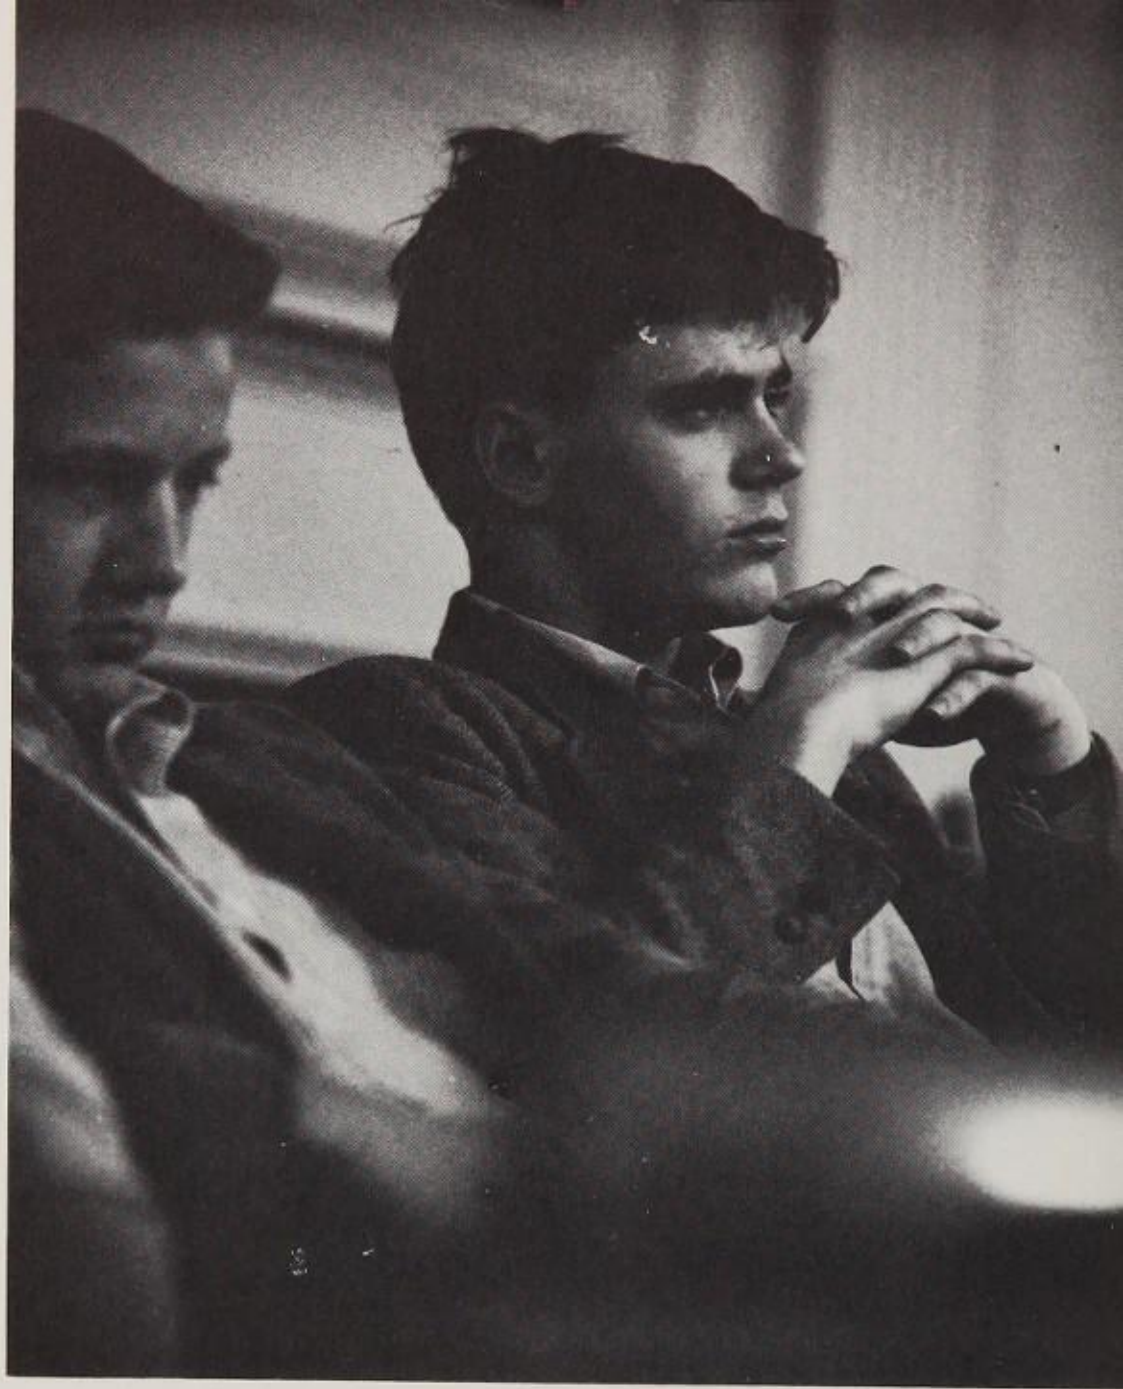

Exeter's two major publications came through in an impressive manner this year, in spite of many last minute rushes.

Despite eruptions in the lower echelons of the board at the beginning of the winter term, PEA's twice-weekly Exonian functioned smoothly enough to turn out sixty issues reporting news and sports for the 83rd consecutive year.

Departing from the limited sphere of school commentary, the Exonian editorial page included columns and literary criticism. The fall term saw the paper turn pro-Kennedy under the chaotic but intense dictatorship of a partisan president.

Sports coverage included JV and club games for the first time in years, as tight-fisted New Hampshire advertisers anticipated the recession and brought advertising to a new all-time low.

In the winter term, hard-working lower officers and a versatile veteran photographic editor compensated for the chronic absence of a distinguished managing editor. Underclass heelers showed surprising competency, and the Exonian settled smoothly into the routine of publishing two issues a week.

PUBLICATIONS

Editorials occasionally attacked the Student Council for doing nothing, until Exonian editorial writers decided, as the Council had already, that this was its function. A late-term flurry of excitement came when a voluble senior wrote an impassioned letter that Exonians and the United States were getting fat and lazy on scotch and soda (a charge which most Exonians discreetly denied) and that the answer was a "surge of young men." His suggestion set off a chain of letters between Corvettephobe with an aversion to surgeons, two PEAN editors, a power-mad prep with a white-tower complex, a students' mother, and an amorous faculty wife.

Emerging more than slightly victorious from its fall heeler drive, the PEAN settled down to the routine which was to build up to a frenzy by Spring Vacation. The oft-quoted Chairman of the '61 staff remained skeptical about anything that had to do with the book. Board members and heelers alike wandered aimlessly during the fall term and Christmas vacation, the thundering "more ads" weighing heavily upon their senses. While the Art Editor was knocking them dead with his layout progress, the Executive Editor sat at his desk and pondered possible fiction writers for his cause, and negatives of all sorts began piling up on the darkroom floor.

By the middle of the winter term, some layout had actually materialized. Line counts on a few things were now even guessed at with an old, impressive stand-by formula. Periodic heeler leaflets appeared, entreating bulbous idolatry to accompany a heeler revolution, and outlining plans for the capture and subjugation of oppressors Lip-baby, Budlet, Diamond Don, Barry Omosthigh, Nasty Charlie, Johnny Hagenfarb, and his faithful dog Plimpy.

Many new diversions turned up, as press time neared. Line cuts were lost and found. Pictures were made to order on short notice in a very efficient darkroom. Early lights began to burn, with the finaling of stories. At last the book was ready to go to press. A very drowsy crew left school clinging to the copy, but all went well at the printers.

DISCUSSION

The range of activity in this year's discussion groups varied a great deal, as some were very active, while others nearly ceased to exist.

The high point in a barren year for the Herodotan Society was an evening-long meeting with Visiting Fellow John Mason Brown. His warm, southern personality put the meeting on successful ground, and set the tone for the rest of the evening, which was termed the most enjoyable of the year. Mr. Brown spoke on no particular subject, but rather chose to tell anecdotes and stories of some literary or historical nature. He strove toward no concluding point, but all agreed that the meeting had a primary reason for success: Mr. Brown himself. As one senior expressed it, he found it valuable that so cordial a man as Mr. Brown could come to Exeter and spread his optimism.

Earlier, in the fall, before election day, History instructor Francis L. Broderick gave a talk on the effect of Senator Kennedy's Catholicism upon the voting in November. During the evening he laid particular emphasis on the idea that the Catholic issue would serve only to harm the Republicans, a fact which was later generally borne out.

For the third meeting of the year, Mr. Steffen Plehn, P. E. A. '55, spoke on the experiences he had while working in Washington, specifically in the Bureau of Budget. Despite his limited amount of work in Washington, Mr.

Plehn showed a deep interest in and a considerable understanding of the financial affairs of the government, and succeeded in presenting them well to an audience which was certainly ignorant of his field.

In general, the Herodotan society had a year which could be called "sub-mediocre." Its only glory came in that it held three times as many meetings as the Lantern Club. On account of the apathy displayed, plans were discussed for combining the Herodotan Society and the Lantern Club, and for expanding its size and interests. Such plans were still in the nebulous stage when the winter term ended, leaving only the hope among the members that there would be more meetings in the spring and less lethargy on the part of the officers.

The Inquirer's Society, the Academy religion group, was 'in' this year as fifty boys, some hoping for an office next year, and some to pad their PEAN biographies, and about ten interested in religion, met with Dr. Herbert Gezork in the first Sunday noon discussion of the year. Jim Wilkinson quickly established himself as the leading inquirer with his answerless questions, and the Society moved from speaker to speaker — the membership dropping somewhat as most of the office-seekers read the handwriting on the wall. With the four officers, headed by President Ted Preston, living in Webster, there seemed to be a certain prerequisite for office. Speaking on communism and the church, Reverend Wallace Robbins gave the most interesting talk of the fall term as even some of the mutest inquirers ventured their thoughts and new ideas.

On January 22nd, Reverend James H. Robinson of the Church of the Master in New York City, spoke to a larger-than-usual gathering about his summer work camps in Africa — inspiring the first offering ever in Phillips Church for his "Operation: Crossroads Africa", and several applications for summer work in Africa in 1962. Society secretary, Stuart Rawlings had already planned to go with Dr. Robinson this year.

Reverend William Coffin, Jr., the Yale chaplain, attracted a large crowd in early March as he spoke about his good friend, Dr. Robinson. The society held four more meetings and then celebrated the successful year with a picnic.

The Kirtland Society had a comparatively successful year. Under the dynamic leadership of President Bob Littman the club had the most members and its most active year since its inception in 1952.

The fall term featured four lectures and films. To start the year off, Mr. Coffin, one of the club's advisors, showed slides of his recent trip to Greece. The second meeting was in a lighter vein as Mr. Echols, the other faculty advisor, gave an illustrated lecture on the Greek cartoon, and its influence on modern cartoons. The final example given was a picture from Playboy magazine with which most of the members were already familiar. The winter was highlighted with a talk by a bearded Nick White, '59, on recurring themes in Ovid's Metamorphoses from the Aeneid.

The membership of the Mathematics Discussion Group reached a peak during 1961, more than doubling its constituency over that of the previous year. Topics of discussion ranged from the highly practical applications of mathematics to building a non-cylindrical wheel.

PACIFIC COAST CLUB

REGIONAL CLUBS

The following is an exclusive interview with a Southern Clubber who had been sworn to secrecy concerning the club's activities:

"I was sittin' in my room one day when this big fellow walks in. I said hello. He said hello. I said, whatcha want? He said, whyncha join the Southern Club? I said, 'don't come from the south, and neither does my roommate, Buht. Then the big fellow said, my name's Jim Light, and I'm the president, and if you become the hundredth member, you get in free. Buht and I were gettin' interested. All you have to do is be a Southern sympathizer. I said I once et grits. He said, you're in. Then another fellow walks in. He said he was Ted Preston. I said, hello. He said, 'arya, you're number 99, and you're 101. I said, damn, and Buht wasn't too pleased either. Preston said a guy named Doumlele got it.

"'Bout March 4th, the club held its informal dance with Concord. Buht said it was a good dance, but I was up home ice-fishing, so I missed it.

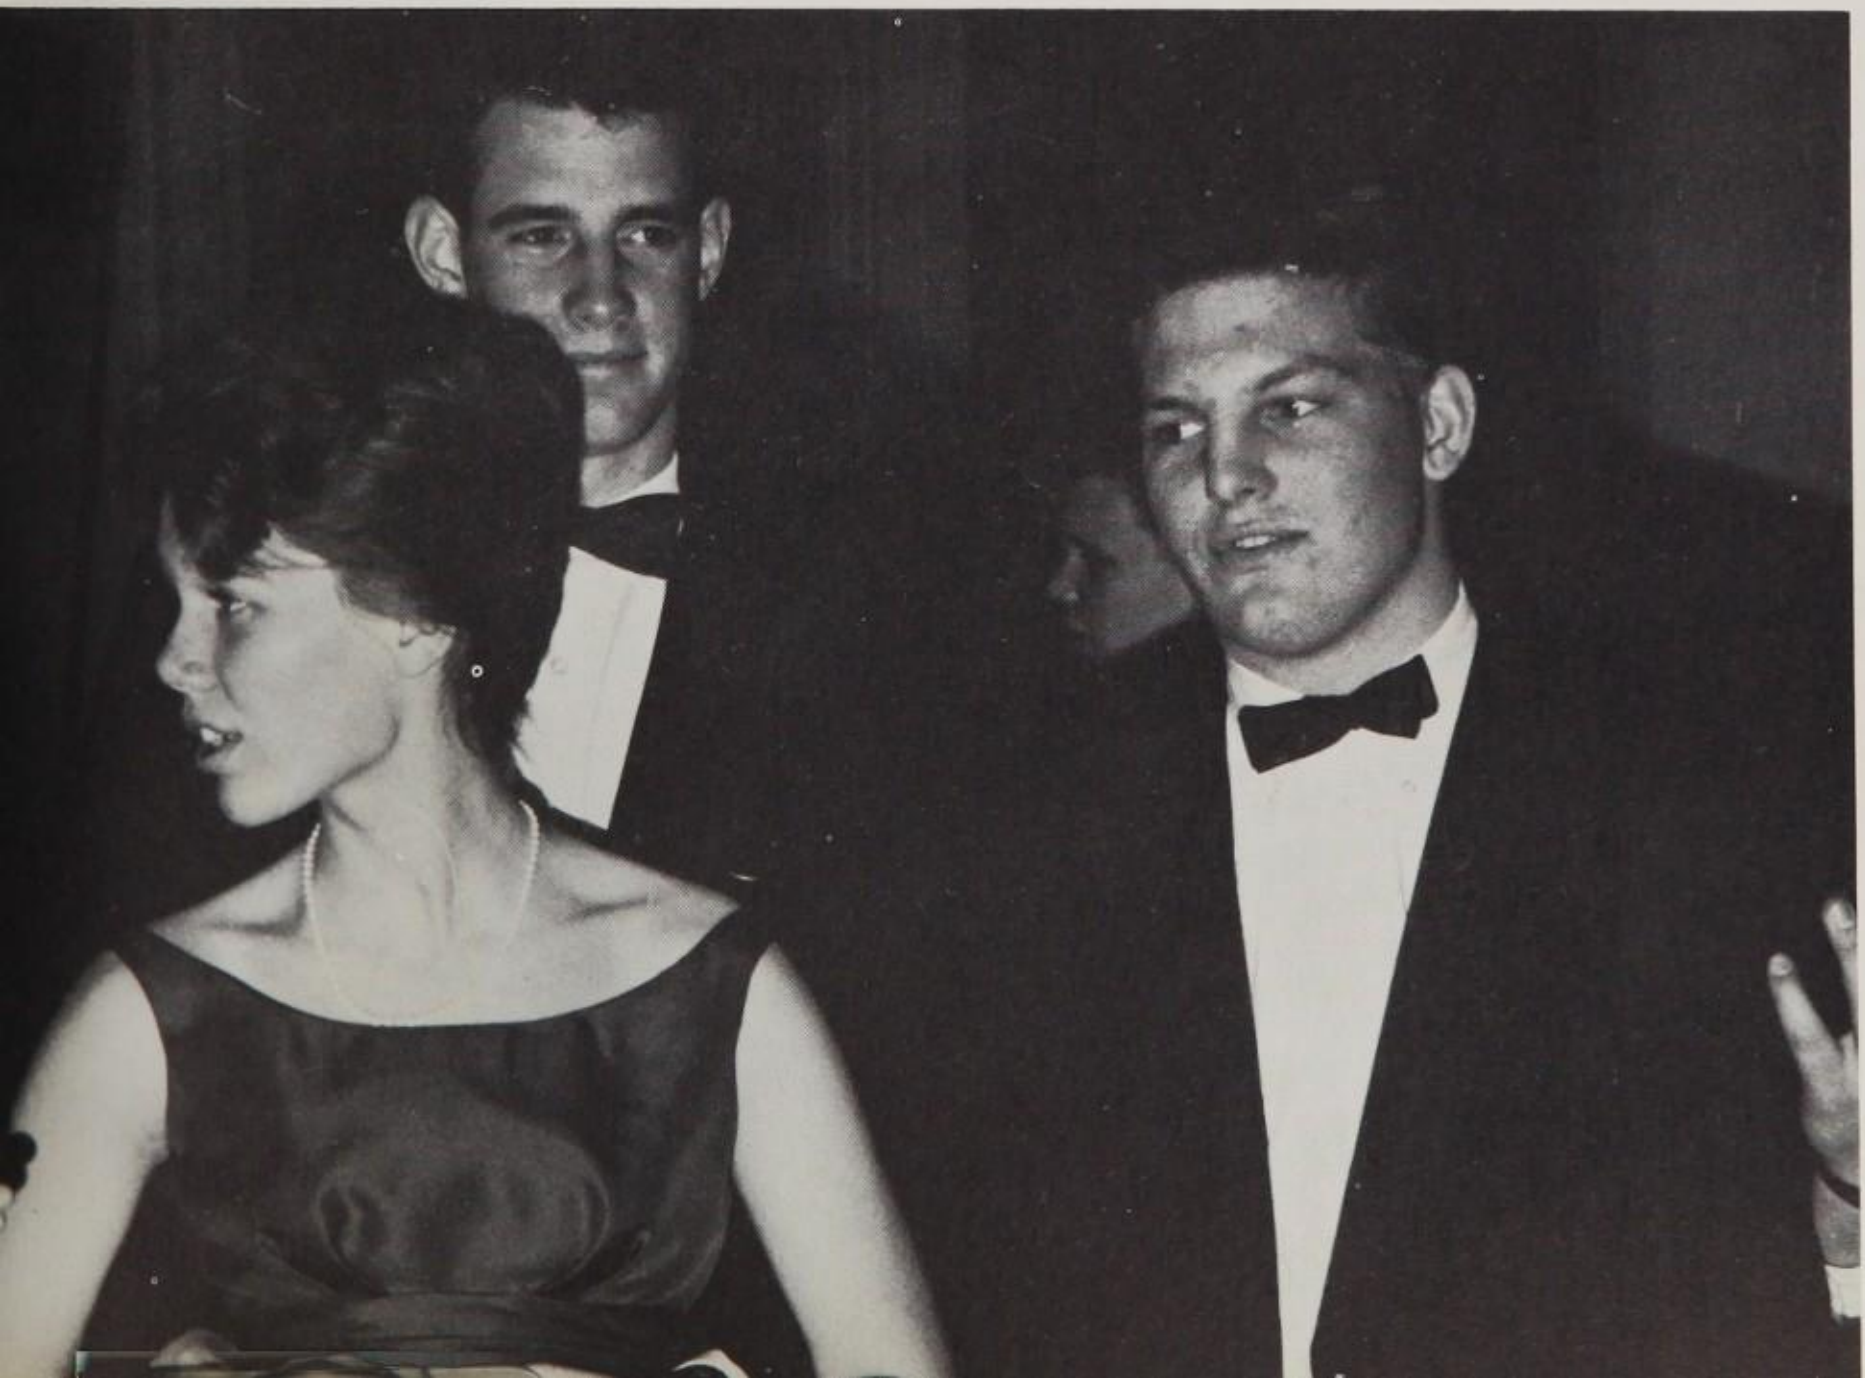

"The Winter Surprise was a week later, and they showed movies of the Andover football game. Buht saw himself in the crowd once, but I didn't. Light said the surprise was s'posed to be a dance down at Abbot. Buht was glad they had the movies seein' how he saw himself. I didn't care much either way and had three grape crushes.

"After that, all we did was work on the club's big Spring formal. Buht said he was glad we joined. I said it was okay but there was too many hicks. Buht said, yes."

SOUTHERN CLUB

Lured by notices advertising free refreshments, Exonians gained admission to the Pacific Coast Club regardless of their regional backgrounds. The high point of the PCC year was the winter dance. Held in the Chapel for the first time in years, the dance was termed "... a whopping good show ..." by the most negative of dateless Exeter seniors, Thrushump Bladdersap. Nearly 150 Exonians tested the Mann Act, by importing young ladies from all over the eastern seaboard. These young ladies, met by their eager dates at the Exeter depot, were whisked from athletic event to athletic event, both outdoor and indoor, during the afternoon. As evening drew nigh, most of the couples wandered into the Tea Dance, where they were entertained by the Royal Exonians.

When the couples arrived at the formal dance, they were deftly escorted to the receiving line by Vice-President Dick Pershing and his merry band of ushers.

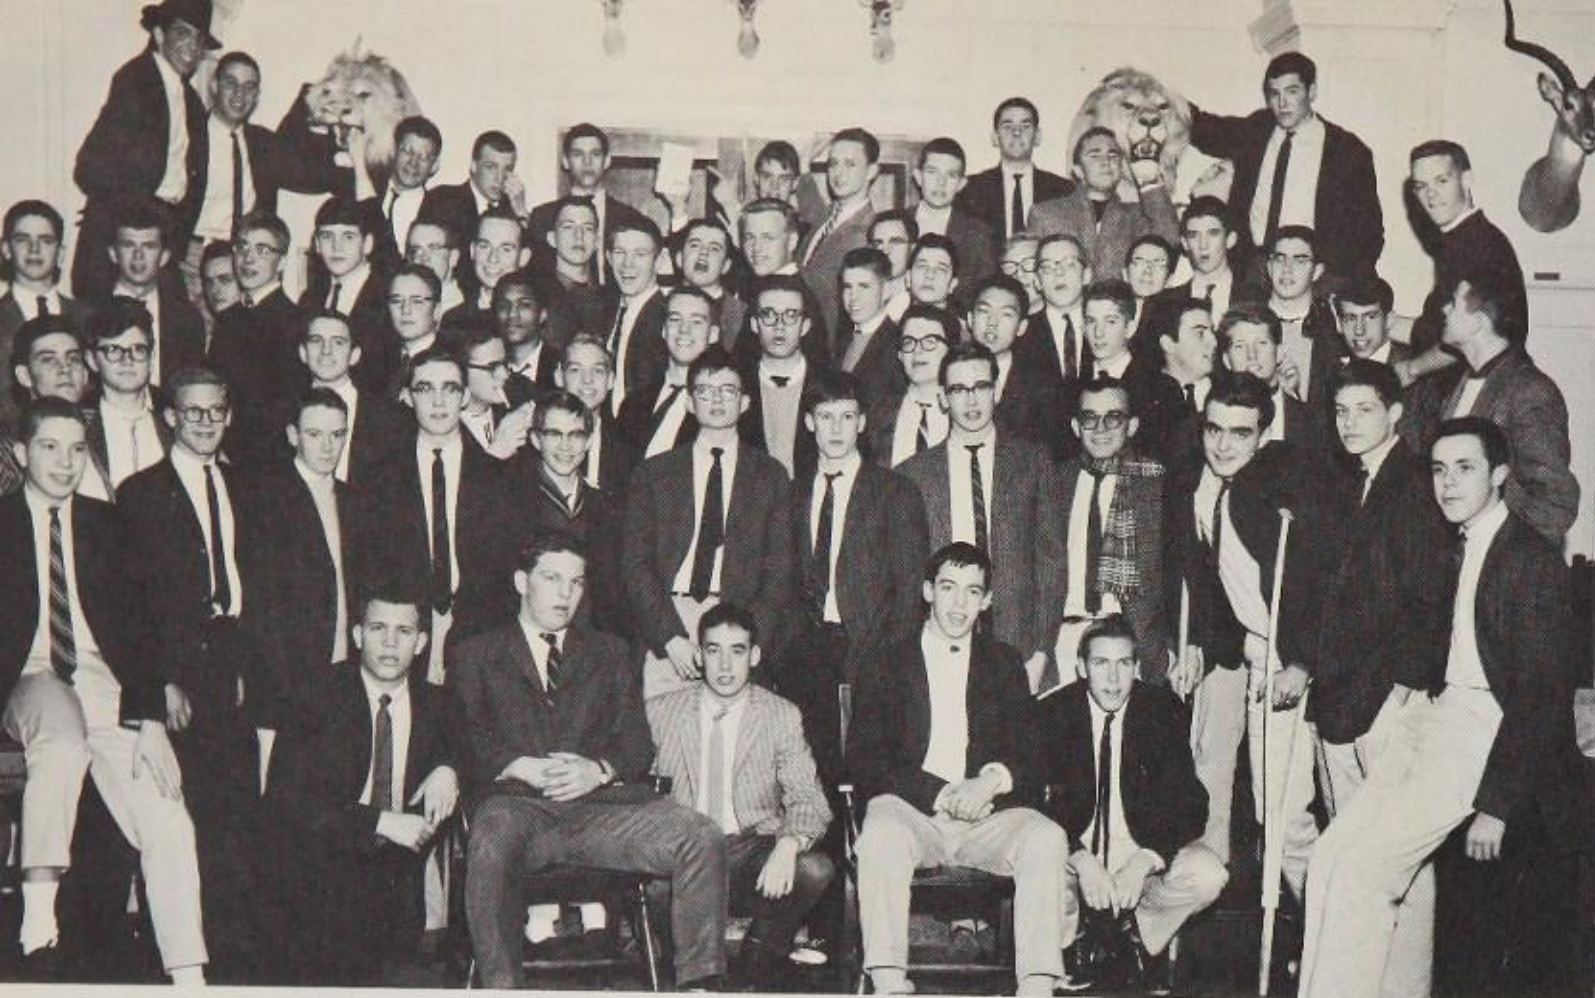

MID-WESTERN CLUB

INTERNATIONAL CLUB

Once done with this social grace, Exonians and their dates twirled to the music of — — — under arcs of crepe paper and the artful lighting of the dome which rendered the room restfully dark. The sobering portraits on the walls failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the assembled multitudes for the 1961 Peacquacs who entertained during the intermission. The dance continued for another blissful two hours, and then, as the witching hour struck, couples wandered off into the night. Sunday was spent in quiet relaxation by most couples, their resources of enthusiasm having been spent with careless abandon the preceding evening. At three o'clock, the young ladies were evicted and given an hour to be out of town. With the passing of the Winter Dance weekend, the PCC receded from the public eye, but President Walt Reed was sure that the memories it evoked would be forever cherished.

There was a definite agreement among members and officers of the Midwestern Club that there should be substantial effort towards improving the quality of goods for the June auction, since, last year, a large easy chair collapsed on the stage when an auctioneer attempted to demonstrate how comfortable it was. An informal dance with Rogers Hall was the year's only pre-auction highlight.

LES CABOTINS

LANGUAGE CLUBS

This year saw the renewal of activity in the language clubs after several years of inertia. Los Castizos attempted to revive itself after last year when it existed in name only. In order to attract members from non-Spanish-speaking countries, the club's officers showed films on Spain and several Latin American countries, and also held a dance with real Spanish-style decorations.

After a few years of lethargy, Der Deutscher Verein rapidly became one of the school's more active non-Romance language clubs. Under the leadership of Pete Olney and Mike McCarthy the group supplemented German songs with an informal dance, a full-length movie -- Emil und die Detektive -- and the sensational seven-piece Deutscher Verein Band.

The band, unofficially led by Conway Wilson, was probably the club's most significant achievement, hailed by some as the best seven-piece, folk-song-playing band in existence at Exeter. Some more cynical thought the band the club's only significant achievement. These cynics may have been somewhat justified since the club had no specific purpose. It did not charge dues or keep track of the membership, but remained content to provide fellowship and entertainment to lovers of the language.

Again this year, Les Cabotins kept up with their tradition of presenting the best in French comedy and culture to their membership. Attracted by the prospect of PEA's finest vintage cider and imported doughnuts, the Frenchmen enjoyed a colorful series of slides on sixteenth century France and received a very informative talk on French education from M. Thomas. Turning to comedy, a group of members wrote and produced several short French skits, poking fun at the French II text Jean Valjean, an excerpt from Les Miserables by Hugo. They titled their production "Les Plus Miserables" ou "Dans le Degout de Paris" and had enough foresight to reserve all rights to future production. In the late fall, the club recaptured the soccer trophy from Der Deutscher Verein in a hard-fought erasure of last year's disgraceful loss.

During the winter, the club's bi-weekly meetings were discontinued while two short plays went into rehearsal. It was Standing Room Only in the Little Theatre for the hilarious program of "Une Begalement Tenace" and "Les Boulingrin." As the term ended, the club eagerly anticipated the Spring Term and a possible dance.

SCIENTIFIC SOCIETY

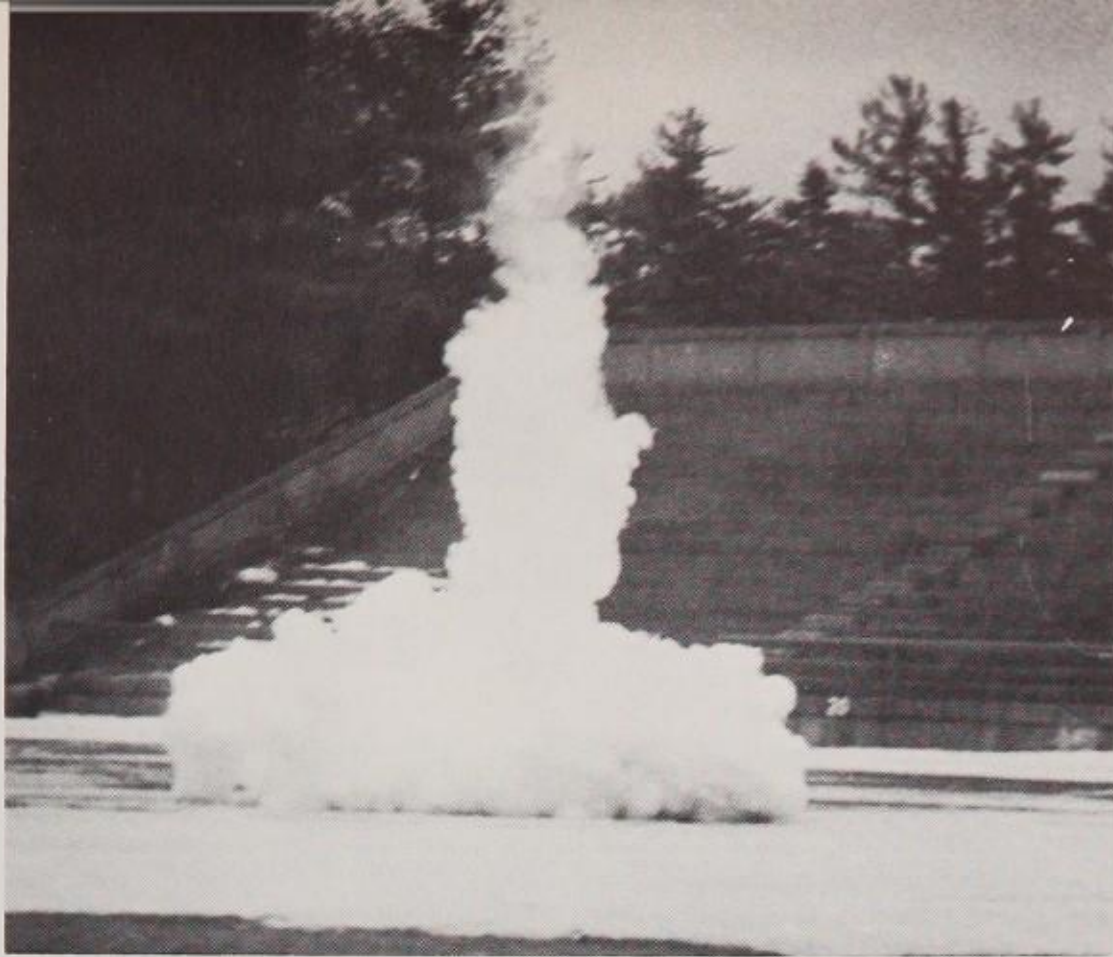

The Scientific Society lay dormant through the fall term as a zealous science faculty labored to rewrite the Society's constitution. When the smoke had cleared by early December, no one was much surprised to find the Society firmly under the faculty's thumb, and incidentally three clubs smaller; the Science Fiction Club, the Model Railroad Club, and the Shop Group had incurred the disfavor of the faculty, and — effective the following year — were dismissed from the society.

Early in the year, however, certain radicals within the Society Council were already pressing vigorously for the Society's first official dance; but the plans collapsed under the attacks of a misogynous president.

The Society emerged from its stupor in mid-winter to sponsor the first in a series of shows by the member clubs. The Rocket Club was the first victim, and student enthusiasm — a total of eleven students attended, all Rocket Club members — convinced Society officials that the idea was perhaps best forgotten.

Meanwhile, activity in the member clubs ranged from non-existent to intense. The Shop Group — lacking, unfortunately, a shop — was all but defunct, and the Chemistry Club — whose officers had been elected through a clerical mix-up — collapsed after a couple of meetings. The Science Fiction Club was plagued by a rapidly diminishing membership, in spite of the hope of editing a Doubleday anthology, and finally became an undercover Ban-the-Bomb Society. The Radio Club suffered from a similar lack of interest. The Model Railroad Club and Rocket Club had a fairly good year, however, and the Astronomy Club, widely publicized by an obviously biased Exonian, reached an all-time high level of activity. The Biology Club did whatever biology clubs do, and also sponsored a lecture on the evils of lung cancer.

MUSICAL CLUBS

This year's musical clubs were the first to enjoy the benefits of the impressive new Lewis Perry Music Building with all its advantageous innovations, but at the same time they suffered to varying degrees from the chaos caused by Mr. Landers' half-year of absence.

The year was marked by the usual number of Student Council chapels dedicated to music, but the polish of preceding years was lacking. The Glee Club, with seven awkwardly scheduled contests, was hardest hit by the disorganization of the year, but Mr. Forbes, filling in, managed to make the best out of every concert. In spite of its lack of outstanding voices, the Club's over-all effect during the year was distinctly pleasing; there were many exciting moments in every concert. The Christmas concerts with Windsor and Abbott, were highlighted by the jointly-sung "Christmas Song" with brass choir and bell, and by Charlie Stone's pleasing solo in Infant, So Gentle, a Gascon carol.

The first concert of the Winter Term, at Rogers Hall, was notable for "Father William," a joint chorus by Irving Fine (taken from Alice in Wonderland) and for the performance of Grieg's "Land Sighting", with a solo by Pete Marshall.

The two concerts at the end of the term, with Dana Hall and Walnut Hill, featured an outstanding rendition of the joint chorus, "The Heavens Are Telling" from the Creation by Haydn, and they also showed promise of what the spring concerts with Beaver Country Day and Concord Academy were to bring. The Glee Club, under President Herb Cochran, had a busy, moderately successful season.

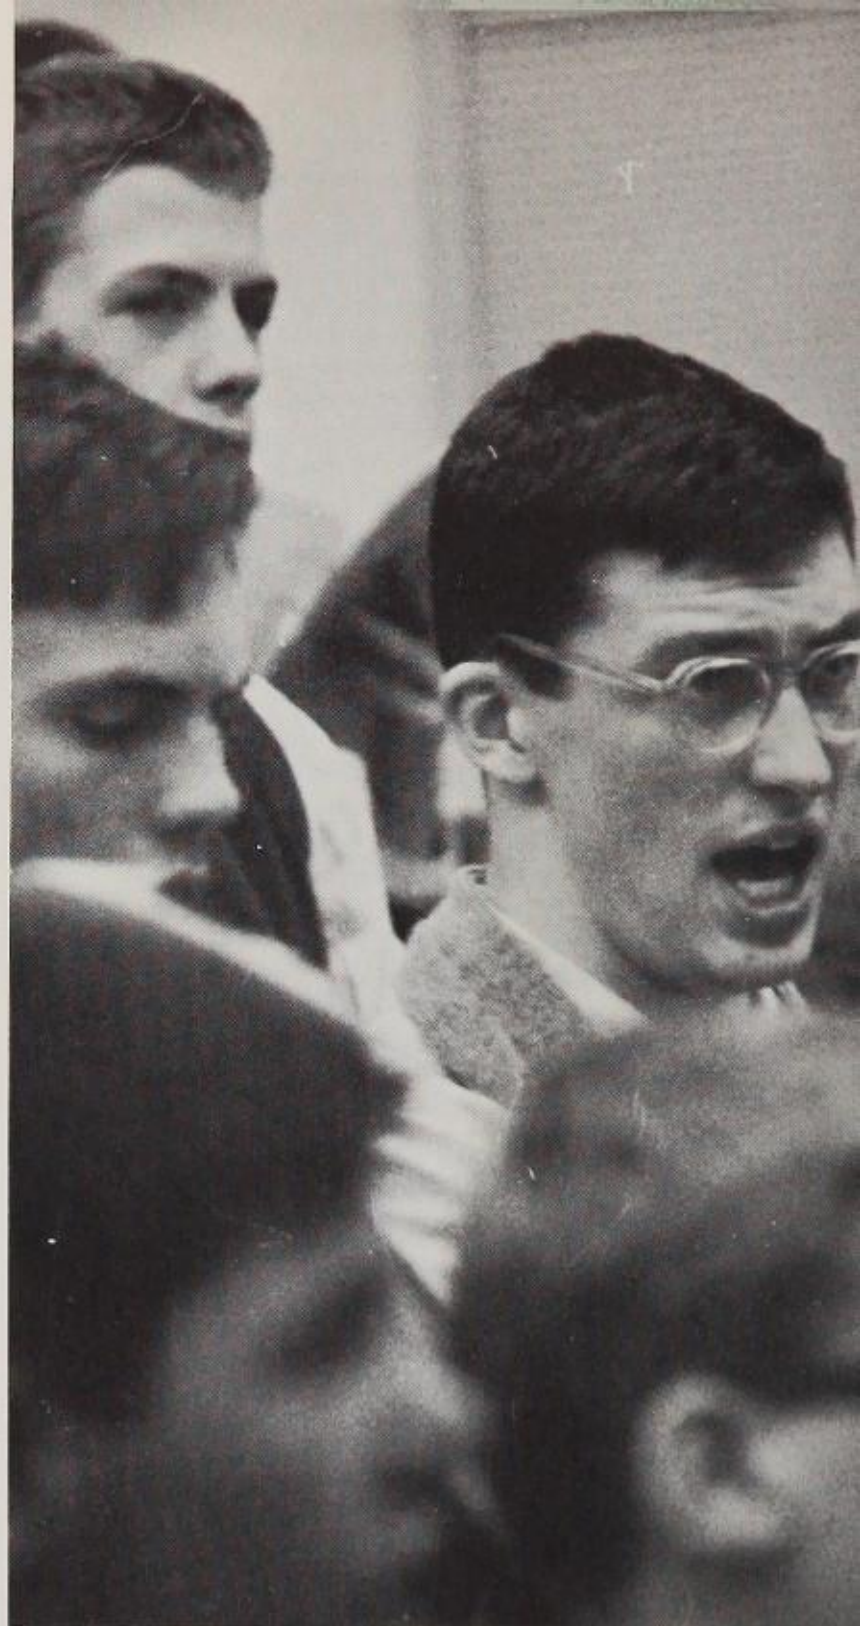

ORCHESTRA

The Choir, was pulled out of its annual rut by Mr. Forbes' introduction and alteration of choral responses and amens, keeping Phillips Churchgoers awake as never before.

The Peadquacs, under the leadership of Pete Marshall, started off the year with an unimpressive chapel performance, but they gradually got used to audiences and to each other, and turned in some good entertainment at Glee Club and school dances. Their best singing was done at outside engagements, and, during the spring term, when they sang for their supper at Kurtz's.

The Orchestra collaborated with the Glee Club in several instances this year, including a chorus from Bach's Magnificat; in Berlioz's "Thou must leave thy lowly dwelling"; in "Here Yet Awhile" from Bach's St. Matthew Passion; and in "The Heavens are Telling". The Orchestra did a commendable job on its own with three major classical works: Bach's choral prelude Wachet Auf, Handel's Faithful Shepherd Suite, and Schubert's Overture to Rosamunde. Supplemented by parents and friends at the Windsor and Dana Hall concerts, the Orchestra played especially well. Michael Riesman's dazzling performance of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 with orchestra highlighted the Dana Hall performance. The playing of Concert Master Clifford Weber, of cellist Stephen White, and of pianist Riesman, in addition to the training of the strings under the expert guidance of Mr. Kobialka provided great strength for the Orchestra. A Brass Choir of Orchestra members was flamboyant in its performance of Piston's Fanfare for the Fighting French.

A smoother, more polished Royal Exonians, led by pianist-arranger Brian Cooke and featuring lower Philip White on the alto saxophone, set a mellow mood for the Glee Club dances. With invaluable coaching from former Royal Exonian players Tom Gallant and Phil Wilson, the band radically altered its repertoire and achieved a more modern sound. The group was especially well received at Roger's Hall and Dana, and it also played at dances at Exeter and Durham high schools.

Rallied by leader Tim Ransom, the PEA Marching Band again provided active support for the Exeter team throughout the football season. Emerging from a winter's hibernation, the Band anticipated occasional appearances in the spring.

A singing group unique in Exeter's history was fostered by the Royal Exonians: a close-harmony, modern quartet backed up by a rhythm section and either five saxophones or five trumpets. The Conway Wilson Septet, the only jazz group on the campus, also found refuge in the Music Building, along with calypso, folk singers, and struggling pianists. It was a year of musical spontaneity.

DRAMATIC ASSOCIATION

Teahouse of the August Moon, the Dramat's fall production, was entertaining, but far from spectacular. In the winter, a more ambitious undertaking, Darkness at Noon was handled surprisingly well.

The setting for Teahouse was post-war Okinawa, and the plot concerned the efforts of an incredibly incompetent Army officer, Captain Fisby, to prepare a small town for self-government. During the course of the play, Fisby is involved in several hilarious melees with his immediate superior, Colonel Purdy, by building a teahouse instead of the school specified in his orders, by turning all the townswomen into Geisha girls, and by starting a large (and illegal) liquor business.

He is, of course, apprehended, and for a while it looks as though the villainous Purdy is going to undo all his good work. Purdy does not, and the play ends in a burst of sunshine and joy.

The best acting came from Mowry Connelly as Fisby, from Loren Curtis as the captain's demented psychiatrist, and from John Boehrer as Sakini, a sort of stage manager, who interprets not only for Fisby but also for the audience. All three had good, funny lines, which they presented well.

Kevin McCullough, in the role of Purdy, handled his part with nearly equal skill and was particularly masterful in his use of facial expressions. The other supporting role, that of Lotus Blossom, a Geisha girl whose function is somewhat misunderstood by Fisby, was well done by Wayne Scott. Lotus Blossom's antics with Fisby were perhaps the funniest part of the play.

Despite the good performances of the major characters, a large amount of the play's value was destroyed by the villagers. None of them looked very Okinawan, and the majority, when speaking what was ostensibly the local language, gibbered more in corrupted English than anything remotely Okinawan.

The production crew did an admirable job constructing the teahouse, but the inherent difficulties in such a set reduced the overall effectiveness of the production. The scenery, however, and most of the non-villager bit parts were done competently, and the play as a whole was amusing and successful.

Darkness at Noon deals almost entirely with the disillusioned reflections of a loyal Communist party member who is about to die for treasonous activities of which he is entirely innocent. The majority of the play is occupied by these reflections, taking place in the form of flashbacks, which slowly bring Rubashov (the loyal party member) to realize that Communist Russia has never been the land he dreamed of and fought for. Just as this realization takes hold of him, he is executed.

Throughout the play Charles Ascheim, despite his occasional faltering, did an extremely good job. The agony of his despair and bewilderment was real and moving, and his expression, both verbal and facial, of his emotions was excellent. Sam Bragdon, a cynical Czarist, officer who is Rubashov's neighbor in prison, was very convincing. Serving mainly to start Rubashov thinking, Bragdon added a great deal to the play by being occasionally amusing, and occasionally depressing.

In her first appearance on the Exeter stage, Dale Denham, one of four town girls in the play, was remarkably good, playing Rubashov's secretary-paramour Luba Loshenko. She had little difficulty in convincing the audience of her inability to understand the impersonal cruelty of the new system.

As Gletkin, Rubashov's interrogator, Mowry Connelly again turned in a very strong performance. His fanatical persistence and his terrifying inhuman cruelty left no room to doubt but that there was some sincere, but misguided conviction lurking in his mind. Randall Conrad, as Ivanoff, an old friend of Rubashov, and presently the commandant at the prison, did a competent job, but left some doubt as to whether he had interpreted his role completely.

The strength in the major roles was supplemented by the successful handling of the smaller roles. The spontaneity of such flashbacks as the Italian dockworkers added greatly to the play's effectiveness.

The sets were among the best the Dramat has ever had, making the frequent flashbacks possible without any noticeable break in the continuity of the play, and creating the illusion of a huge prison in the extremely limited space of the Chapel stage. In contrast, sound effects were unrealistic, but were successfully subdued and the play came through as one of the better recent Dramat productions.

PEA SENATE

DEBATING

Again this year PEA's debaters were outstanding, while the organizations themselves increased their stature by being much more active than groups of the previous year.

The Golden Branch-Gideon Lane Soule Literary and Debating Society, operating under consolidated form for the second full year, was as usual the foremost opportunity for the orally oriented. In the fall term officers and students alike were stimulated by the nation's political activities, which set the tone of the debates for the rest of the year. In fact there was only one non-political debate all year long, "Resolved: That something should be done about something," which ended the fall term with a flourish.

The "Branch-Soule" was the mother of several new innovations on the debating scene. The first of these, was a debate in which its officers defeated their counterparts from Andover in a preview of the spring's formal E-A debate. Of more school-wide importance was the poll which the society held of both faculty and students just prior to November's election. The Academy, though, proved to be no reflection of the nation's feelings as Nixon won overwhelmingly, Kennedy receiving practically none of the electoral votes allotted to dormitories and houses.

In the Winter Term the Branch-Soule began to slow down, while the debating team and other debating clubs broadened their scope. Mr. Henry Bragdon's boys began warming up for the traditionally active spring by defeating St. Paul's School, while losing to Roxbury Latin late in the term. The PEA Senate was its usual radical flamboyant self this year, providing a winter term highlight by having Eric Hass, leader of America's Socialist-Labor Party, visit the Academy to speak to its members. Three new advisers helped stimulate interest by placing magazine articles pertinent to debate on reserve at the library. The Junior Debating Society was active as usual preparing future debaters, and a new organization, the Junior Statesmen of America, began to find its place in the debating scene, by holding two mock trials and by showing occasional signs of political strife. In the fall trial, John Binkley played "Hawaiian Eye", successfully prosecuting a murder. The winter trial pitted an apathetic prosecution against an all-star defense led by Binkley. The trial itself became unimportant, as attention was focused on sarcastic exchanges between Binkley and chief prosecutor Robert Wagner.

Debating began to re-emerge from its relatively insignificant place in school affairs this year and assume a slightly more important position.

The Yacht Club in the 1960-61 season was unproductive. Its every aspiration was dashed in the mud. They planned a meet with Tabor but through some oversight there was no transportation. "Transportation is a perennial problem," said one club member. The club planned a meet with Brockton, but the voice of despair came from Brockton—"We are sorry to say that through some oversight our pond has dried up." They planned to have an Olympic gold medalist in the 5.5 meter class talk to them but the nasty ole flight engineers held up his plane. "Transportation is often unpredictable," said another club member.

Then on March 12 something real happened. Two crew members of the "Mayflower" came and delivered a memorable lecture on their historic cruise.

MOUNTAINEERING CLUB

The Mountaineering Club was curiously inactive this year, or maybe it's like that every year. It did do some climbing in the Patuckaways. One member told us condescendingly, "This type of thing is very dangerous when tackled by an amateur."

Having been told this, we asked the Vice-President what his most harrowing experience had been. He said wistfully, "I haven't had any, everything is so safe and boring."

In the spring, the club planned to climb Mt. Washington and one member desires to conquer the steeple of Phillips Church.

The Outing Club, in contrast, was a thriving organization. They had 53½ members, all of whom have paid their dues. The club made three trips in the fall. The trip to Chocorua was graced by a supreme example of that good weather that New England is noted for. Needless to say, the second trip was rained out, and the weather on the third was nice.

CHESS CLUB

As usual, the Chess Club year was an exciting one, filled with thrills and suspense. There was a tremendous battle against the Andover chess team in the winter term, which has remained largely unpublicized due to a blanket refusal by the club members to disclose the results, but the high point of the chess season was not reached until Samuel Reshevsky, a professional player, came to Exeter. Playing thirty people simultaneously, and taking an average time of six seconds to move, Mr. Reshevsky beat all the chess rocks the club could muster in an hour and a half and went home. The Chess Club, undaunted by this ignominious defeat, is now arranging for a meet with a two-year old prodigy from Roxbury Latin.

This year, the Rifle Club, under the leadership of Howard Easton, had only a mediocre season. In spite of the consistently good performances of Dave Hazelton and Mike Frederick, the team won only one meet out of six. They beat St. Paul's, but lost to Gloucester High School twice, to Tabor, and to Andover, where they were beaten decisively. Encouraged by the outstanding performance of Mike Frederick, who was the highest individual scorer at the Interscholars, the team managed to place third, behind Tabor and Andover.

This year the club was plagued by a smaller than usual team and a lack of interest among its members. However, since the team is going to lose only two members at the end of this year, President Tom Menzies is convinced that there is some hope for next year.

STUDENTS

PEAN Editorial

By the beginning of his senior year at Exeter, a student is capable of dealing much more creatively with the courses he has selected than in previous years. During his first years at Exeter the student is encouraged to think critically both inside and outside of the classroom. By his senior year a student has also begun to pursue intellectual interests on his own. The development of his critical thinking and the simultaneous growth of his intellectual curiosity leads a student to following up out-of-class projects in addition to his school work. At the same time he can, if encouraged, contribute some of his creativity to his courses.

To some extent Exeter seniors have intellectual freedom within their courses. More often than not, though, classroom discussion is limited to the teacher checking to see whether his class has done the assignment or not. This is a source of double irritation to the student. First, he is unable to contribute much of himself to the course. Second, he draws little that is personal or relevant from the course. In other words, he gains little pertinent to his life or relevant to his purposes. This may account for the apathetic attitude many teachers see in their students, as they sit listlessly in class.

On the other hand, the teacher — that is, the teacher who is truly interested in what he is teaching — is also stifled, for he can pick up few new ideas from his students. Of course, there are exceptions; some of the newer teachers have sought to introduce personal and relevant material into their courses. Most teachers of senior courses present them in such a manner that a student has difficulty in seeing exactly what benefits he is gaining from his courses. In addition, he has no idea why certain courses are required. For example, the American History course which all students, except for a few classical scholars, are required to take in order to receive a diploma has two definite drawbacks. In the first place, a student is never really sure what bearing on his own life an event like the Civil War has, for it is generally studied in a chronological sequence and seems to serve only as a continuation of this sequence. Secondly, the importance of knowing the history of America is questionable, especially for the mathematically and scientifically inclined. Some teachers say that every young American should know the history of his country. But why? This is hardly ever made clear. In other words, a student at Exeter is generally left unaware of why he is learning what he is learning. For him, there is little that is personal and relevant in most of the Exeter curriculum.

A student is also constantly driven by the pressure of grades. He tends to study more for the grade than for whatever intellectual rewards can be reaped. On the other hand, grades cannot be disposed of, for there is hardly a college anywhere that would consider a student without some such criterion to judge him by.

Thus out of the existing situation, two problems arise. The desire for personal and relevant material grows out of the acute thinking that is encouraged from a very early stage at Exeter. The problem of grades comes from the present intellectual stifling, since this stifling leaves the student with nothing but grades to consider. Once a student's creativity and interest are cultivated, grades should become a secondary consideration.

Changes in English, foreign language, and history courses should be designed to promote greater relevant discussion in class. The student should be able to contribute almost as much as the teacher, and the teacher should not only introduce his own ideas, but also gain a clear conception of the ideas of others. Both students and teachers alike should be able to give something of themselves and their ideas to one another. Students should also be expected to do more out of class work than what is assigned. In return, the number of classes a week should be cut down, and perhaps classes could be held on a slightly less formal basis, where the atmosphere is more conducive to sincere consideration and frank discussion. The result is a two-way system of education where both generations are able to transmit something to one another. Education in these fields becomes something beneficial to both groups in such a manner that the boredom and routine of traditional instruction no longer exists.

To remedy the existing situation, a two-part plan could be installed. This plan would call for the discussion and analysis, in class at regular intervals, of the aims of courses. In addition, students should be allowed to do more outside research and study on their own without being hemmed in by day-to-day assignments. Grades should be de-emphasized and subject matter should be given more intellectual, intelligent consideration. A lecture system designed to give students the full benefit of listening to the views of as many members of a department as possible should also be instituted.

In English Advanced Placement courses, where students ought to be selected on the basis of interest as well as on the basis of grades, several changes could be made. In the first place, students bright enough to be placed in such a section are capable of doing a great deal of required work on their own. Instead of going through the year book by book, a class could be given a list of required reading for the Advanced Placement examination at the beginning of the year. Classes could be held twice a week, and rather than pursuing obvious points in a specific book, discussions could revolve around many connected books. For example, instead of discussing The Catcher in the Rye by itself, a class could bring up other books relating to youth such as Look Homeward, Angel and A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man. In such a manner classroom discussions could be made more interesting because the student is encouraged to mention any book that has special significance to him. This method could be flexible enough, though, so that a complex work such as Hamlet could be treated in detail. Occasional class themes on Advanced Placement topics and poetry analysis could also be introduced. Outside of class themes should not be free, but they should also not be too specific. For instance, rather than assigning a theme on the word truth, a teacher could ask his class to analyze any abstract term.

In history, the purpose of a particular course should be made clear to the student. In addition, students in Advanced Placement courses should be given basic assignments out of one or two central texts, and outside of this a suggested reading list which can be used at the individual student's discretion. Furthermore, students should be expected to do out of class research on their own and come to class prepared to present a personal thesis on a given period. As in English courses, such a plan can work only with classes held fewer times a week.

In advanced language courses where the emphasis is more on literature and less on rules of grammar and the like, the teacher should place books into a literary and chronological relationship. In addition, students should be given time on their own to select and study certain books, not required in the course, to bring more depth into the course. Classes, instead of being a check-up on the assignment, could revolve around more general discussions conducted in the particular language involved.

In mathematics and science courses the problem is somewhat different, for there is a notable lack of correlation between the material covered by the two departments. Students cannot use material obtained in one course as an aid in the other until both courses are simultaneously at the same level. Furthermore, the material covered by both these departments often appears irrelevant. To change this situation, teachers should outline at significant points during the year just how a particular section to be studied is connected with material yet to be encountered.

With the introduction of this kind of plan the teacher would serve two purposes. First, he would be able to contribute his own ideas, and he would also use his knowledge of the subject to provide facts that could be used in discussions. A student, relying on the knowledge obtained through both assigned and non-assigned work, can present his own views on a particular subject. Thus a variety of ideas can be put forth, and in addition, a wide range of source material could be introduced.

In almost every course it is impossible for the advanced student to receive the full benefit of all the teachers in a certain department. The American History lecture system endeavors to do this, but not to a large extent. In advanced mathematics and science courses, where every student is studying the same thing simultaneously, an intensive lecture system could be introduced with ease, as is true with history courses. In what one might term the "humanities" this lecture system would have to be installed in a slightly different manner, and it would be necessary that all sections involved be notified in advance of exactly what topic will be spoken on, so that each student could prepare for a certain lecture beforehand on his own. This lecture system would enable the student to become exposed to the ideas of many different teachers, instead of just one, and it could also serve to introduce certain topics to the student. Lectures could be given once a week in addition to two or three small classroom meetings.

Although all these classroom changes are an end in themselves, there is a further important goal to supplement them. With the revision of classroom methods and the encouragement of creativity, outside of class meetings for discussion of intellectual topics between faculty and students would be quite desirable. Students whose scholastic ability prevents them from being in fast sections but whose interest is nonetheless keen would be able to talk freely without having to worry about grades. Secondly, students in fast sections would be able to discuss topics with faculty members which interest them, but which do not fall within the immediate range of their courses.

This kind of system would have to work on a purely informal, spontaneous basis. For example, a student, or a group of students, interested in the modern psychological novel could inquire in various department rooms to find what teachers share this interest. A coffee discussion in the Perry Room could then be arranged. The spontaneity of this depends on both faculty and student willingness to accept this as the existing situation. In other words, faculty members would have to be prepared to be approached in such a fashion. At present some faculty members are invited to talk before various discussion groups, but generally not all members of a club are interested in the topic to be discussed, while some non-members are. In addition, discussion is controlled by the speaker, and students merely ask questions without really contributing any ideas of their own.

Exeter graduates who are well out of college have welcomed the arrival of the Advanced Placement program as something that will help the Exeter alumnus escape the dullness of a repetitive freshman college year. The success of this program indicates that Exeter seniors are intellectually capable of handling what was formerly considered college-level work. There is little doubt but that many Exeter seniors are bored with the education they are presently receiving, and the question now is whether Exeter seniors can do college-level work in a college-level manner. This is obviously not wholly possible because the Exeter senior has not matured as far emotionally as a college student. Still he is capable of working in a more advanced manner than he presently does.

The ultimate purpose of this entire project is, on the one hand, to give students a chance to inject something personal and relevant into their education, and at the same time to let faculty members do the same. The change involved is from the passing of second-hand knowledge from one generation to the next to a two-way, first-hand system.

FOOTBALL

As the 1960 football season opened this fall, Coach Ted Seabrooke had good reason to be optimistic. With a strong core of eleven returning lettermen plus three outstanding new boys, the team, captained by outstanding half-back Gary Wilson, looked forward to its first winning record since 1956. With depth provided by a good second string, top-flight performance seemed guaranteed. One weakness plagued this otherwise indomitable team, and that was its inability to keep the pressure on throughout an entire game. It was this second-half let-down which cost Exeter her long-awaited victory over Andover in the 18-18 tie on November 12.

Early signs of this weakness appeared in the season's first game, a 12-7 loss to Brewster. After assuming a 7-6 lead early in the second half, Exeter fell apart and time ran out before the Red could get moving again.

The team redeemed its previous loss on October 8 in front of its first home crowd in a hard-fought 19-10 victory over a big, inexperienced UNH Freshman team. Alert defensive work by Gib Harris and John Merrill coupled with a driving offence sparked by quarterback Tom Bilodeau accounted for Exeter's victory.

After two rough games with bigger, older opponents, the Red easily downed a Mount Hermon team of its own size and age in a 22-0 shut-out. The game was a real test of depth as with three first-stringers out, Coach Seabrooke played his second and third units the entire second half.

Spirits were high as the home team prepared to take on a big, new Deerfield team. But the P.E.A. eleven got off to a fatally slow start. Deerfield took advantage of Exeter fumbles to stack up an ominous 14-0 lead. Then in the second half the team really came to life. With a minute and a half to go, Deerfield had the lead 26-20. Bilodeau then engineered a fantastic drive which put the Red on the Deerfield two-yard line with nine seconds remaining in the game. But it was too good to be true and the buzzer sounded as Bilodeau searched futilely for a receiver.

At Worcester the Red team was again robbed of victory by its inability to play both halves at peak performance. This time Exeter got off to a fiery start to score two touchdowns in the first half. The Red line was immovable and the backfield rampaged the length and breadth of the field. But the let-down set in just as Worcester rallied in the second half to bring the score to an anti-climactic 14-14 tie.

The team benefited from its mistake at Worcester, and on November 5 managed to keep the pressure on all the way to easily down Tufts Frosh, 36-22. Sparked by quarterbacks Bilodeau and Hal Hubbard, who ran and passed for 185 yards, Exeter scored four touchdowns in the first half.

At last the day of reckoning came, as on Saturday, November 12, the entire student body and a large crowd of alumni supporters climbed the hill to Brothers Field at Andover to witness the annual Exeter-Andover game. Although a comparison of the Red and the Blue season's records indicated a close game, Exonians were sure in their hearts that this was the year for long-awaited victory. Their confidence appeared well-founded as the Big Red rattled off three touchdowns in the first half before a stunned Andover crowd. Bilodeau passes to Joe McNulty, Ted Preston, and Chris Overton and runs by Wilson accounted for two Exeter touchdowns, a pass to Rick Mahoney for the third.

Just as the first half had been all Exeter's, so the second half was dominated by the Blue. A let-down because of over-confidence and a rash of penalties against the Red allowed Andover to come back to an 18-18 tie. With four minutes remaining, however, a Bilodeau pass from the Red 42 to Captain Gary Wilson deep in Blue territory was nullified by a holding penalty. Then with twenty seconds left, a vicious tackle brought an Andover ball-carrier down on his own 12, and the ball squirted loose. The official waited until Exeter had recovered on the five before calling another holding penalty. The game ended a few moments later as both stands began to empty quietly.

With five starters returning, and a squad composed mainly of underclassmen, this year's soccer team was afforded the opportunity to play without relying on individual stars. The players resolved at the season's outset that, lacking exceptional skill, they would depend upon "guts" — a worn-out term that represents nonetheless the most effective weapon in sport.

Having outscored Governor Dummer in a pre-season scrimmage, Exeter beat an inept Belmont High team, 4-0. The defense was not tested, while the attack displayed good passwork, but no evidence of a definite scoring punch.

The team then lost two successive games to competent college freshmen squads, each by the margin of a goal. After dropping a closely-contested game, 2-1, to Dartmouth at Hanover, PEA traveled to Cambridge to meet a Harvard team spearheaded by a 22 year-old Nigerian who had starred in Olympic competition. Despite the brilliant play of the defense (sparked by Seth Ross, Bill Reed, Terry Robinson, Mac Sommerlatte, and Captain Sam Bragdon, who played the best game of his three-year career as Exeter goalie), Exeter lost, 1-0, on a goal set up by John Thorndike, captain of the 1959 team.

By beating Mt. Hermon for the first time in four years, the Exeter team began a string of four straight wins. The game was won, 2-1, in overtime with Kip Minaert, new to the squad this year, scoring both goals. The Tufts Freshmen were easily blanked, 4-0, in a dull contest; then PEA beat Deerfield, 2-1. Upper insides Minaert and Carrier provided the scoring punch by pumping in two goals in the first five minutes of play. Deerfield retaliated, and the Exeter defense, though sometimes shaky, resisted until bailed out by the spectacular fourth-period play of a line led by Barry Custer and paced by the brilliant play of wings Chip Gillespie and Steve Cooley. The offense had finally come through, and Exeter had beaten Deerfield at Deerfield for the first time in seventeen years. The fourth straight victory was a 6-1 triumph over Medford High. Kip Minaert's hustle on rebounds earned him the season's first hat-trick, while lower Rich Hammond showed promise in the goal.

The Yale Freshmen fielded the smoothest-playing unit faced during the 1960 season, and Exeter lost, 2-1. Custer charged through for the only Red goal. The defense was still giving up less than one goal a game as the M.I.T. freshmen were swamped, 6-1.

New Hampton bowed, 4-3, in overtime, having tied the game up by scoring three goals within six minutes in the third quarter. Custer scored the clincher, and Pershing and Robinson played their best games of the season.

Exeter lost on November 9th to an undefeated Andover team, 3-1. The Red team's performance was disappointing and not thoroughly competent. The Blue squad was an exceptionally good team and deserved a greater battle than was offered by its biggest rival. Some Exeter players were then given to think that perhaps "guts" were what the team lacked most. They had forgotten the Deerfield game.

CROSS-COUNTRY

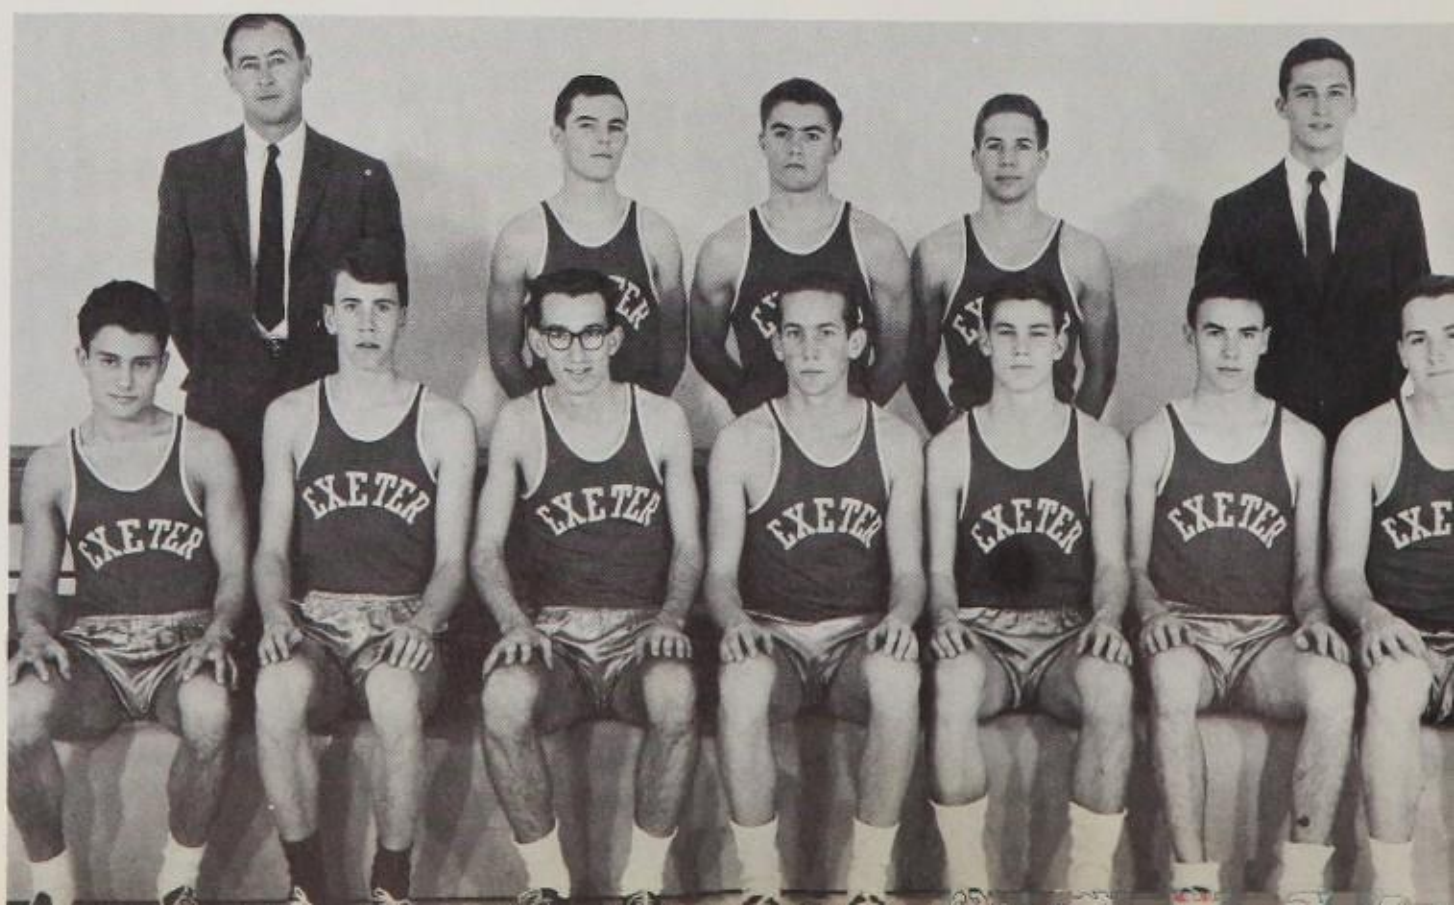

It was the day of the Huntington meet, and the 1960 Cross-country Team was undefeated. A winning season was already assured, and only Huntington, and Andover in the Interscholastics remained.

Captain Bob Anschuetz and Mike McCarthy, the only returning lettermen, and new boy Roger Smith had been the nucleus of the squad from the beginning, sweeping the first three spaces in the opening 25-30 win over the UNH Freshmen, and since finishing one-two-three for Exeter in every meet.

Former JV runners Al Keck and Neale Sweet and Jay Prout were steady finishers and had helped in the 22-37 win over St. Paul's and in the victory at Hebron the following week.

But Huntington, led by first man Baird, soon to be the New England champion, swamped the Red with record times, 22-32. Baird eclipsed the old course record by five seconds with a 12:12 time, while Anschuetz, running the second best race ever by an Exonian on the home course, in 12:31, could do no better than fourth.

The seven-man Exeter entry at the Interschols faced a tough field. Huntington had entered—and there was Andover, Andover that had lost only to the Harvard Freshmen, and had even beaten Huntington.

The great mass of runners lined up at the start, then began their early limbering strides as the gun sounded, the pacers surging ahead. It was a bad day for Exeter.

McCarthy injured his knee and quit after 800 yards. Anschuetz, bothered by a cramp, could only place twelfth, followed by Smith in seventeenth. Then came Sweet in thirty-second, and Prout in thirty-fifth, while Tom Black and Frank Denson finished far back in the field. It was over—Andover was first, Exeter, seventh in a field of ten.

BASKETBALL

When the basketball team first assembled in November, 1960, the outlook for another good season was bleak. Seven of the first eight men of the best team in Exeter's history had graduated and the expanded schedule of eighteen games had added several formidable opponents and a second game with Andover.

But three months later, the season's record was 14-3 and the team had finished with eleven straight wins. New seniors Al Bornheimer and Dave Osborn had combined with Captain Jerry Hinkle and returning lettermen Pete Lamp and Bill Covington to form a hot shooting and well-balanced starting line-up, which was supplemented by letterman Jim Light and Tom Bilodeau.

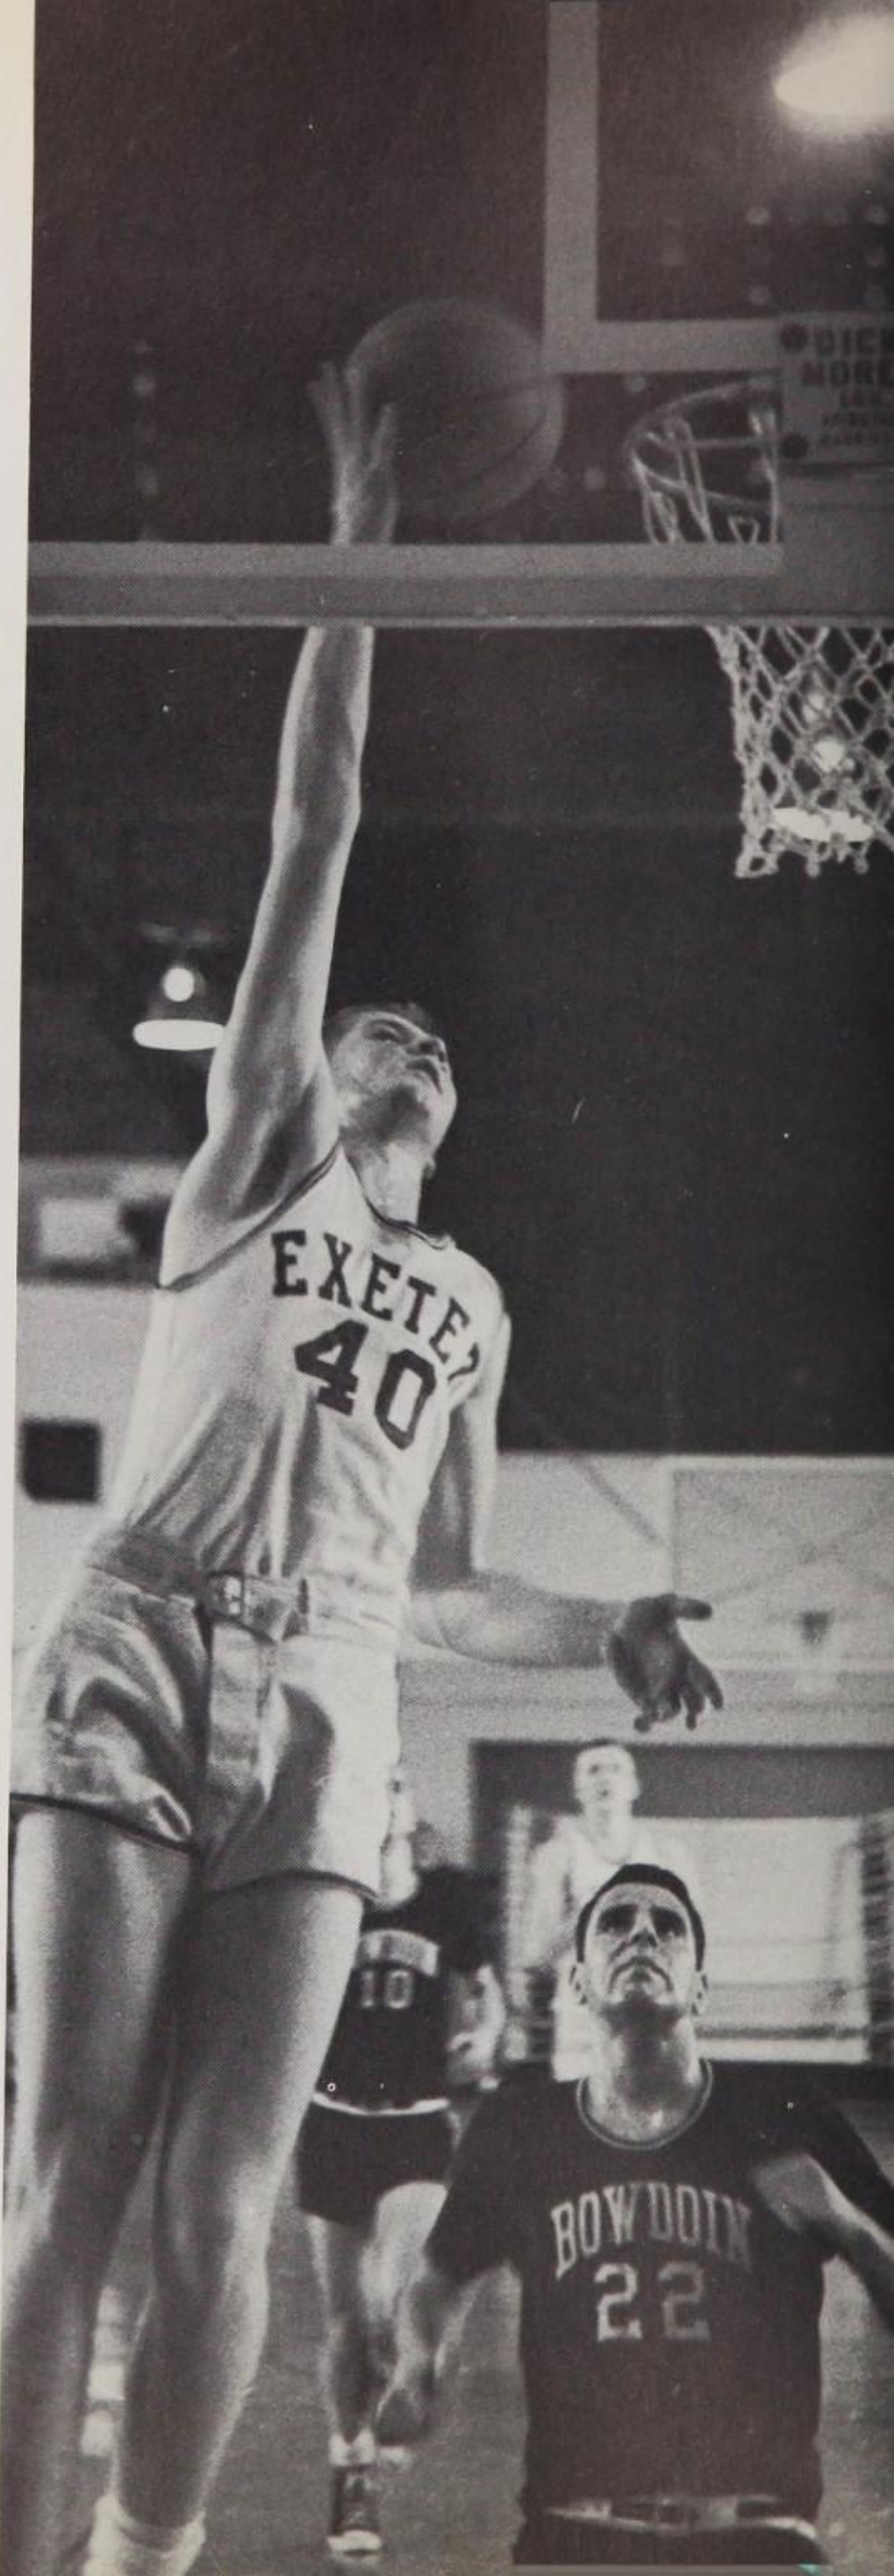

As in the past two years, Exeter opened well, rolling to an easy 98-52 victory over Newton High School. But then came two straight losses to the St. Anselm's Frosh and Huntington. The last game before vacation evened the slate at 2-2, however, as Cushing Academy fell easily, 81-47.

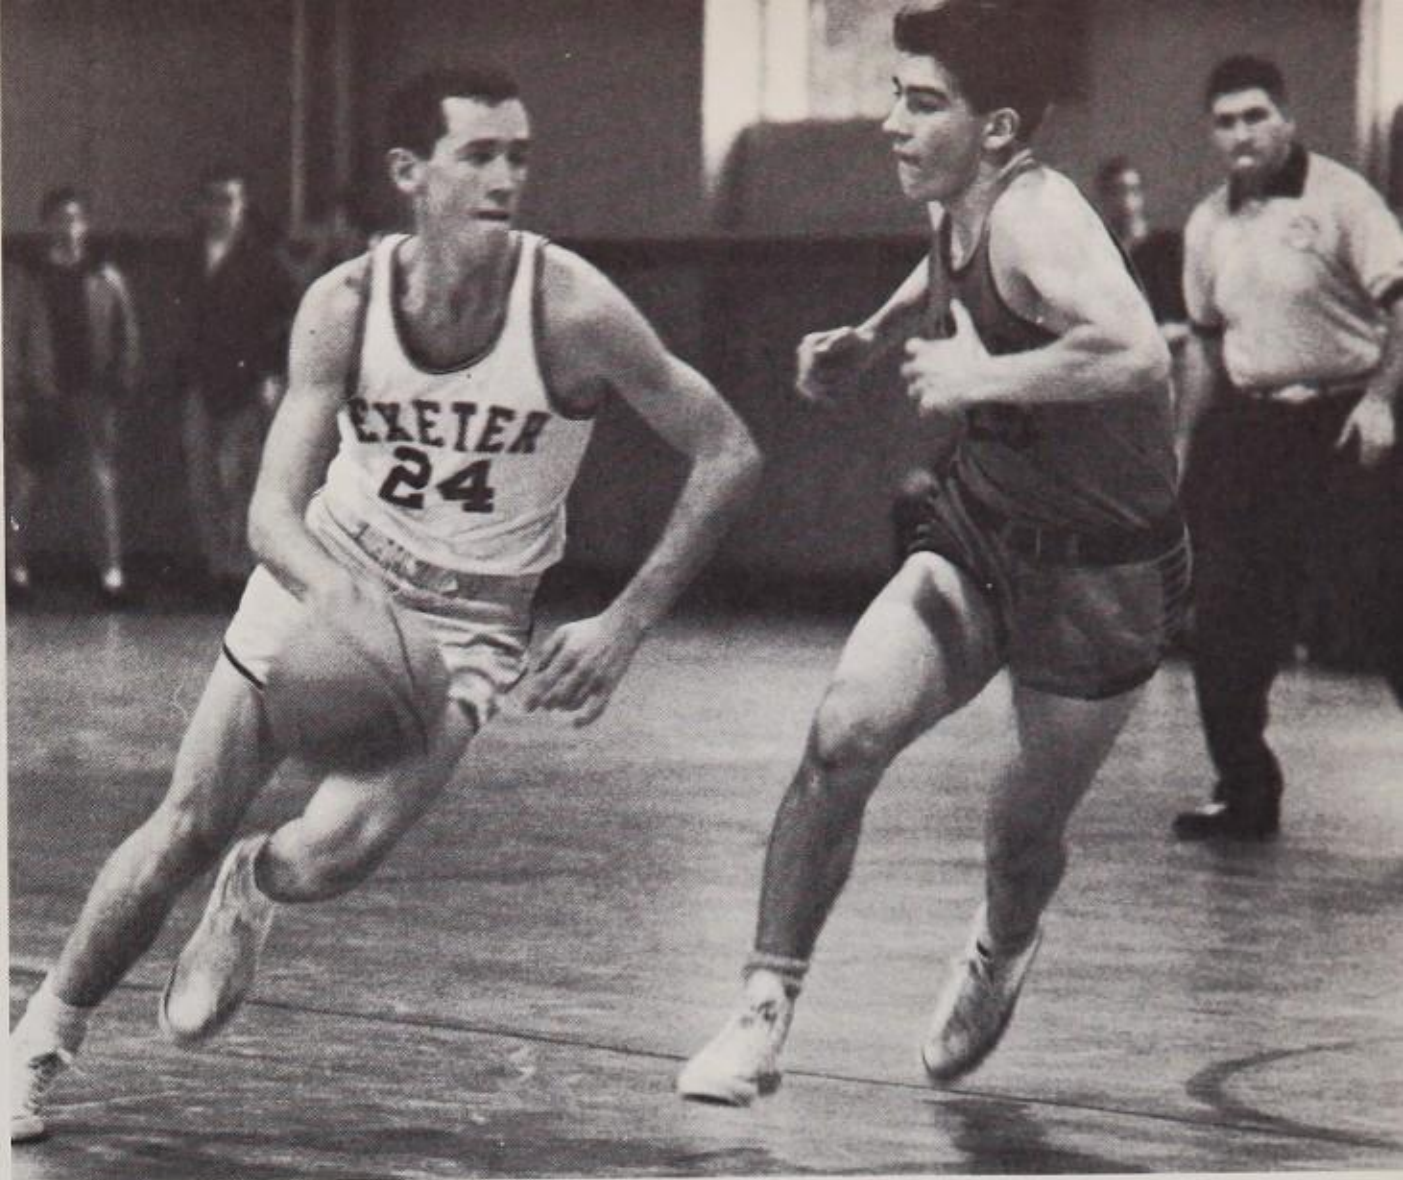

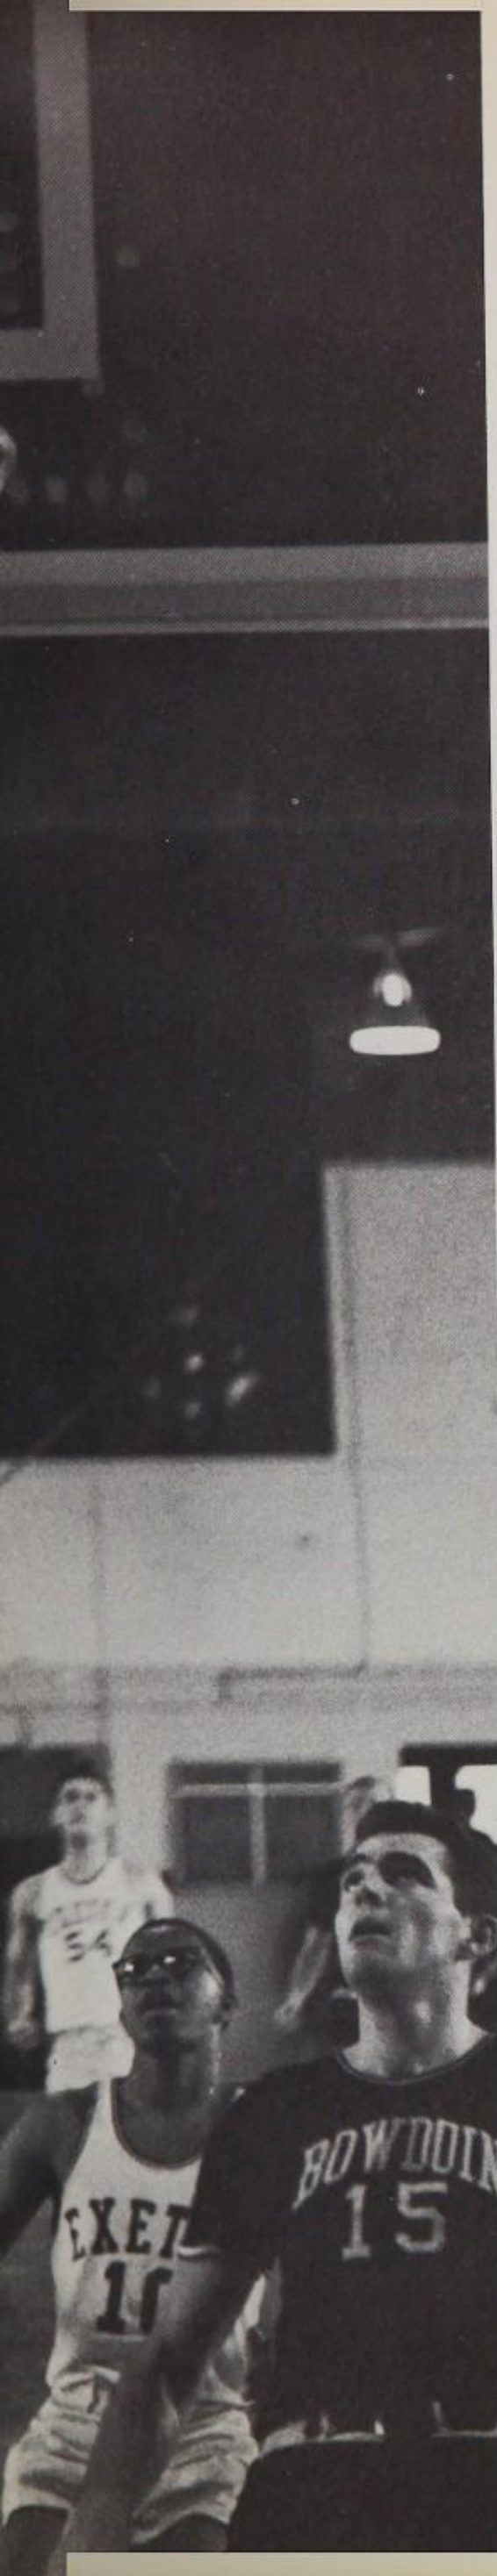

After a lacklustre performance against MIT which still resulted in a 76-59 victory, Exeter came up with its highest offensive output of the year, pumping in 102 points against a big and strong Worcester team. Unfortunately, Worcester scored one point more in the tremendously exciting, triple overtime game.

After a listless 71-49 victory over Hebron, the team finally won a close game, edging Brewster, 92-90.

Next came Manchester Central, which fell 84-46, due to a devastating second-half fast-break offense which scored 46 points to Manchester's 19.

Thus, the stage was set for the first Andover game at the Hill, which was to match two confident, highly-touted teams. Andover was favored and took a 34-30 half-time lead. The third quarter was fairly even, with Exeter pulling ahead, 51-50, in the final seconds, but the fourth quarter was clearly Exeter's. Outhustling and outshooting the tired Andies, Exeter won handily, 71-62. Bornheimer scored 30 points, his season's high. Bill Covington also sparkled with his magnificent ball-handling and floor play.

Exeter had a close call at home against a spirited Tilton team, which fell, 74-71, only after pulling ahead twice in the final minutes. A week later, Wentworth was crushed, 85-62. Exeter made it seven straight by beating the Bowdoin Frosh, 79-53, in one of the best team efforts of the entire season, as five men hit in double figures.

But the outlook was not good for the upcoming UNH game—the Frosh, who had not lost to PEA since 1953, fielded their usual excellent team. A fourth-quarter Exeter spurt, however, pulled off the biggest upset of the season as the Red won, 87-78, sparked by Bornheimer's 25 points and Covington's great ball-handling.

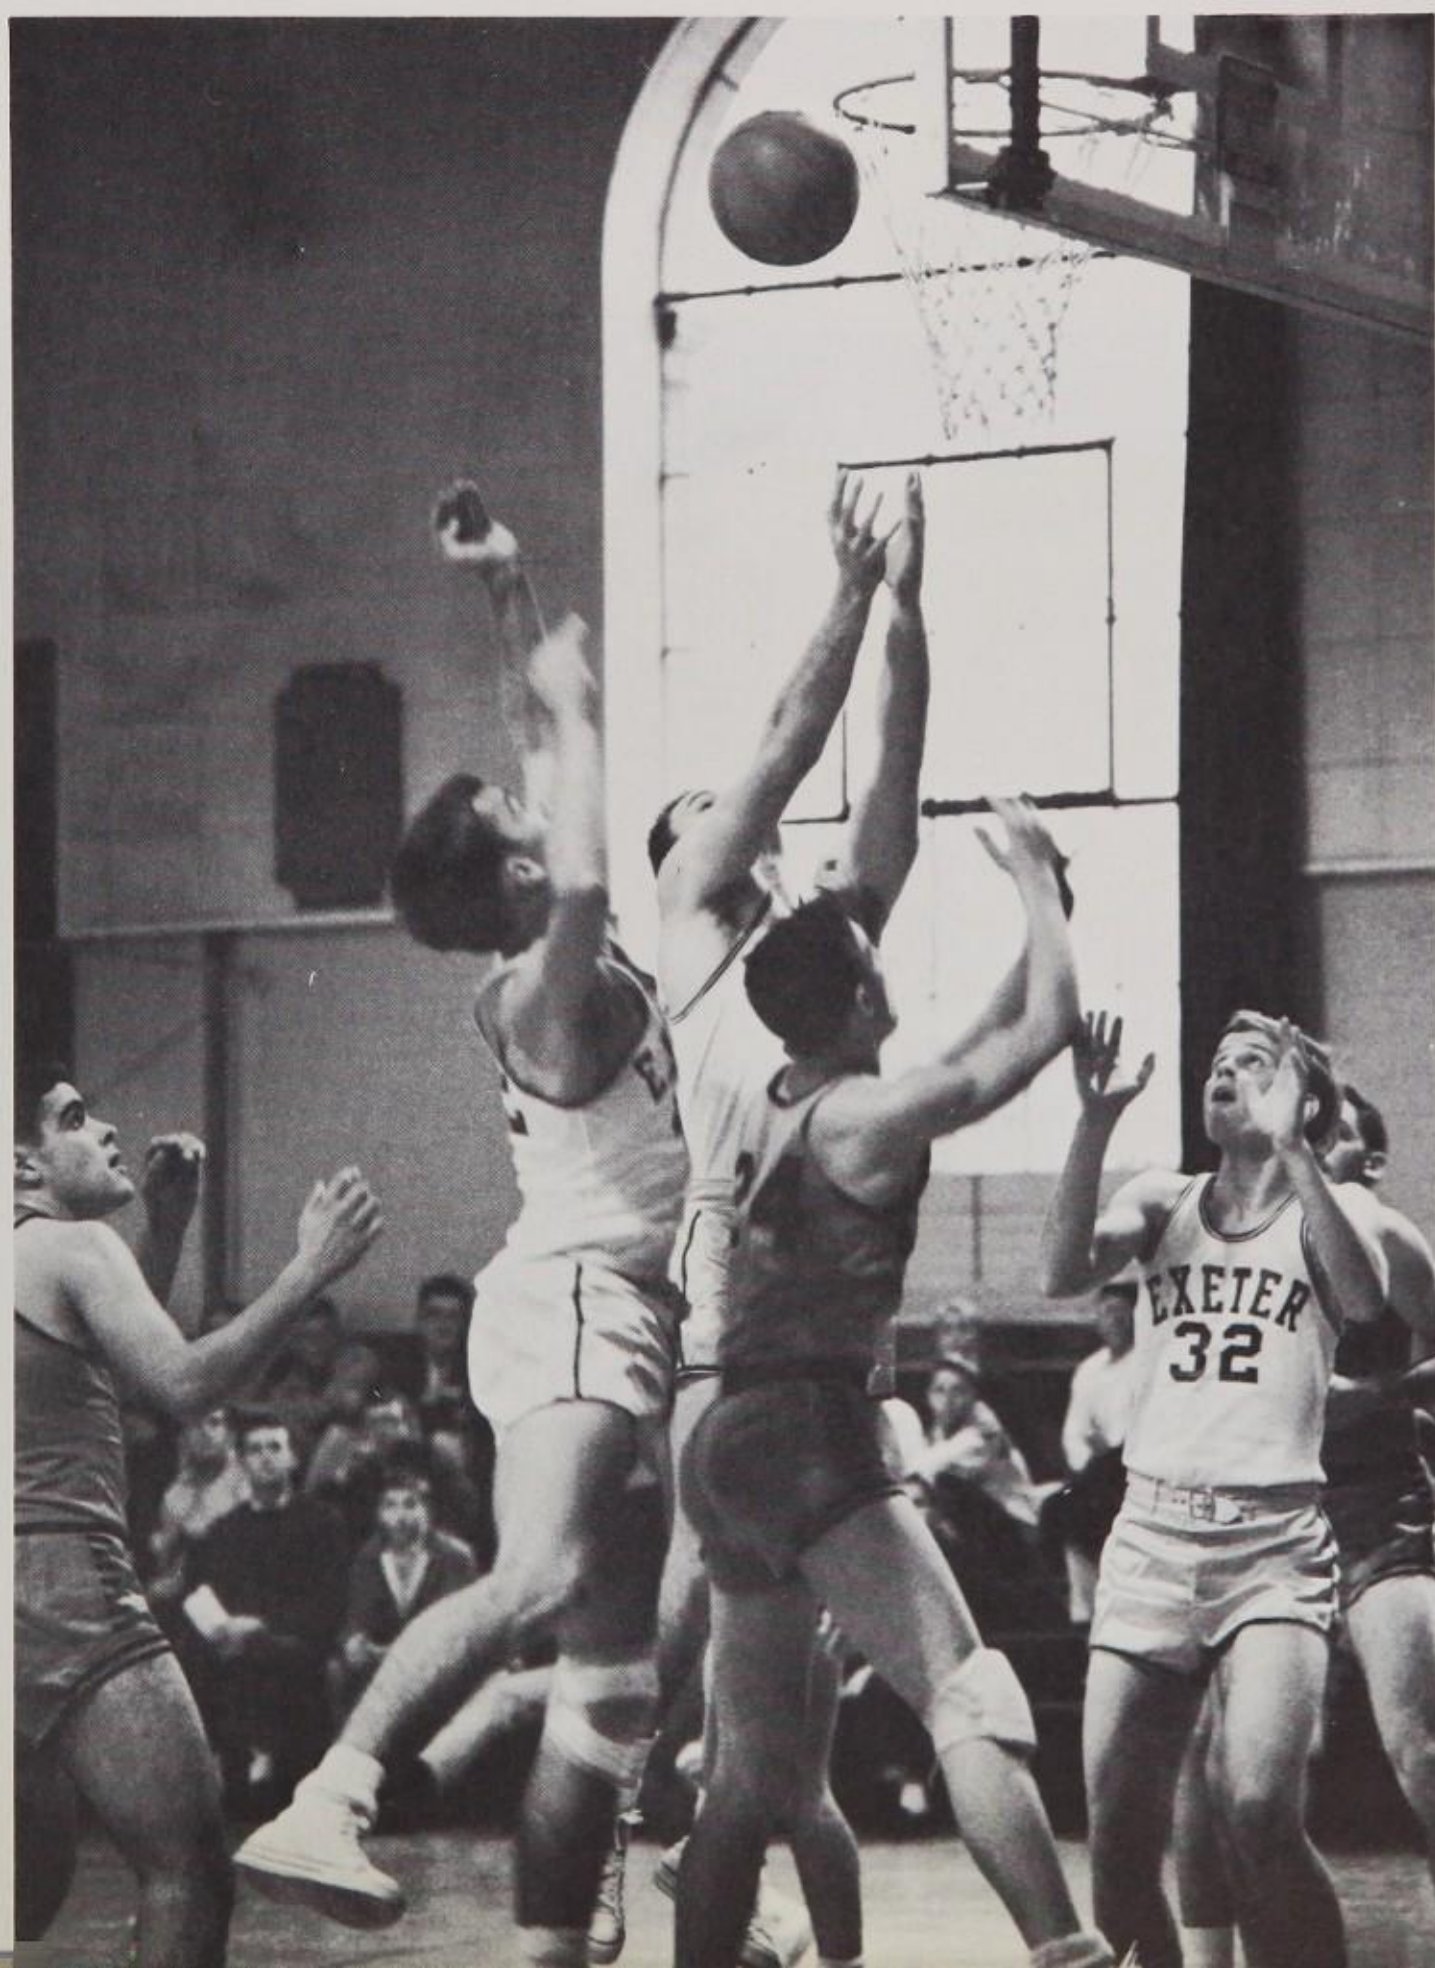

This game was the climax of the season; the rest was all downhill, even the game with Andover. Tufts fell, 85-57, and Tilton was beaten again, 74-68, in games which were interesting only so far as to see whether Hinkle or Osborn would get the most rebounds.

Finally, on March 4, Andover traveled to PEA, hopeful for an upset, but not very confident. As expected, they went home disappointed. The entire Exeter starting team hit in double figures in the 79-61 win, as Exeter's defense, which had been underrated the whole year, forced Andover to shoot from the outside. So, for the third straight year, Exeter had defeated Andover in basketball, bringing an unexpectedly good season to a close.

HOCKEY

Hopes were high for a successful hockey season this year with a strong nucleus of nine returning lettermen, led by Captain Dan Hogan, and several promising new boys. Pre-season expectations were justified when the team ended the season with an impressive record of 15 wins and 2 losses, outscoring their opponents, 104-29.

The first game of the new season saw new boy Joe O'Keefe score a hat-trick in a 7-0 clubbing of Newton High School. The team then traveled to Hanover to face a strong Dartmouth Freshmen team. In a tense, hard-checking duel, the veteran Exeter defense lived up to its pre-season rating as Exeter topped the Green, 5-2. John Stevens netted a total of four goals, while goalie Duane Aldrich kicked out thirty shots, many of which seemed like certain goals. Exeter experienced somewhat of a letdown after the Dartmouth game, having to stage a third-period rally to defeat a fine Melrose High School team. The entire first line of Hogan, Stevens, and Steve Clark tallied in the 5-3 triumph. Exeter suffered its first defeat at the hands of an unusually strong Harvard Freshmen team, 5-2.

After the Christmas holiday the team returned in good enough shape to crush an inept Milton, 9-1, with John Stevens scoring his second hat-trick of the season. O'Keefe scored three goals against his former Amesbury teammates in the next contest, as the second line of O'Keefe, Morgan Hudson, and Chip Gillespie demonstrated its scoring punch in the 12-0 victory. The next game was against perennially strong Hebron. The Exeter defensemen were at their best and continually thwarted Hebron's offensive desires. Hogan, Walt Reed, Stevens, Clark, and Hudson tallied in the 5-0 shutout.

Superior skating helped Exeter defeat Medford High in the following game. Playing without the services of Stevens in an away game at Belmont Hill, the PEA team was hard-pressed during the first period, and in spite of several brilliant saves by Aldrich, Belmont Hill took an early lead. Exeter rallied in the second period, however, as the defense became noticeably tighter, and with three quick goals came on to win, 4-2. The next game with Lynn English, a 7-2 win, proved costly when top-scorer Joe O'Keefe was sidelined for the season with a leg injury. The team next traveled to Concord to face St. Paul's School, traditionally the strongest in prep school hockey. The play moved rapidly in a very evenly balanced game: offensive rushes were continually thwarted by both defenses. Aldrich played his best game of the year. A scoreless stalemate required a sudden-death overtime which ended in an Exeter victory when Hudson neatly faked out two defensemen and scored. The win over St. Paul's was the first for Exeter in many years.

The next three games proved easy matches for the strong Red, who crushed the U.N.H. frosh, 6-3, New Hampton, 13-0, and the Bowdoin Frosh, 8-1. The outlook for the Andover game was good, until ace center John Stevens incurred a knee injury three days before the contest in a rough 7-1 victory over St. John's of Danvers. Although hampered in his skating, Stevens returned to the lineup, and the team met Andover at full strength. However, Exeter was unable to display the form that had won many previous games and succumbed, 6-2, to a strong Blue squad. Individual defensive efforts by goalie Duane Aldrich and veteran starter Ace Miller, and tenacious fore-checking by Steve Clark kept the game close until the third period, when a tremendous four-goal rally by the Blue clinched the decision.

The next week a healthy John Stevens turned in a tremendous performance as PEA defeated a strong Alumni team for the first time in history, 4-2. Fine, precision play and team-work by the whole team left the Alumni and the crowd gaping.

TRACK

In the late fall, prospects for Winter Track were dismal. "They don't have any field event men. All they've got are a couple of runners. They'll get crumped." For a while, there seemed to be some validity in this prediction. Chris Overton who had jumped six feet last year was out with a separated shoulder. The pole vaulters, broad jumpers and hurdlers had graduated, strong events then, but weak at the beginning of this year. During the season, however, new talent developed in these events. Because of the great improvement in the field events and the excellent performance of the runners the Winter Track Team had a good season of six wins and one defeat.

The first meet with U.N.H. Freshman was a walk-over, an ego builder for the Exeter team, as U. N. H. was defeated, 70 2/3-28 1/3.

In a three way meet, with Governor Dummer and Tabor, there was more activity. Exeter won, 50-20 1/2-13 1/2. John Franzen, on the J. V. Team last year, was high scorer with firsts in the high hurdles and 300 and a second in the 40. Three records were broken in the distance. Mike McCarthy broke the school and meet records in the mile and Mike Nolan strained for a fast lap and broke the meet record in the 1000.

The mile relay at the BAA meet in Boston Garden was the team's first contest with Andover. Exeter's first two runners, Frank Denson and Mike Lerner, started slowly, and when Co-Captain Lee Parker started to run, Andover was leading by fifteen yards. Parker passed his man in his last lap and anchor man Bob Engle easily kept the lead in the last quarter. Exeter won for the 5th straight year.

Exeter sustained its winning streak by beating Huntington, 48-24. Engle tied the school record in the 50 and an improving Ed Famiglietti won the shot put. In the Harvard meet Parker broke his old record in the 600 with a time of 1:16.3, but the team lost.

Ten days before the Andover meet the team journeyed into the Maine wilderness to Bowdoin and won, 75-33; Famiglietti took two firsts in the shot and discus. Co-Captain Taylor Mclean, although he had been having trouble with his hip ran his best 600 of the year.

On March 1st, Exeter won a close meet with Andover, 42 $\frac{2}{3}$ -37 $\frac{1}{3}$. Parker ran well passing two blocking Andover men and won the 600. Negley led a sweep of the pole vaulters at 11'4". Andover swept the 1000 while Famiglietti and McBlain took an unexpected second and third in the shot put. Engle was high scorer for Exeter with a first in the 40 and 300 and a second and third in the hurdles and broad jump respectively. With only the score of the broad jump unreported Andover was leading when Hal Hubbard, on his last jump, beat the Andover jumper by three inches and clinched the meet.

WRESTLING

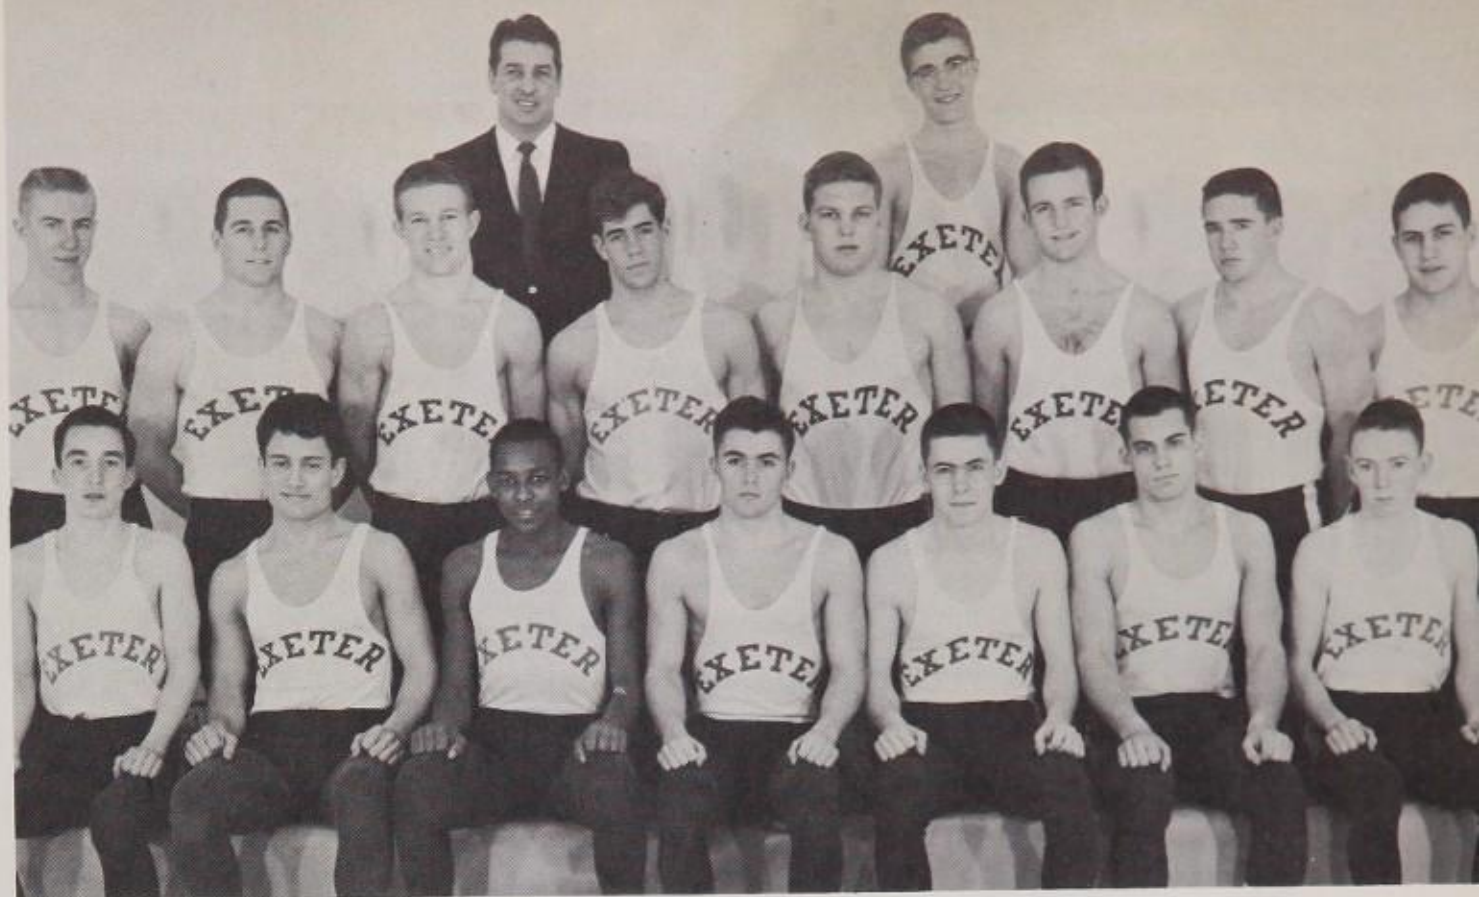

A very successful wrestling season had an unfortunate end as this year's team came close to equalling the terrific record of last year's interscholastic champions. Led by four undefeated grapplers — Holen Gutermuth, Captain John Irving, Mike McClave, and Tom Plimpton—the squad was undefeated until a disastrous Andover meet.

Wrestling under the college scoring system, which was readopted after three years, and with the added 110-pound class, the team easily defeated Roxbury Latin in an informal December meet, and then looked ahead to the Mount Hermon meet in the first week of the Winter Term.

After returning early to get back in shape, the team showed that it was already in good condition by crushing its first adversaries, 28-11. Gutermuth and McClave pulled off early pins to lead the team.

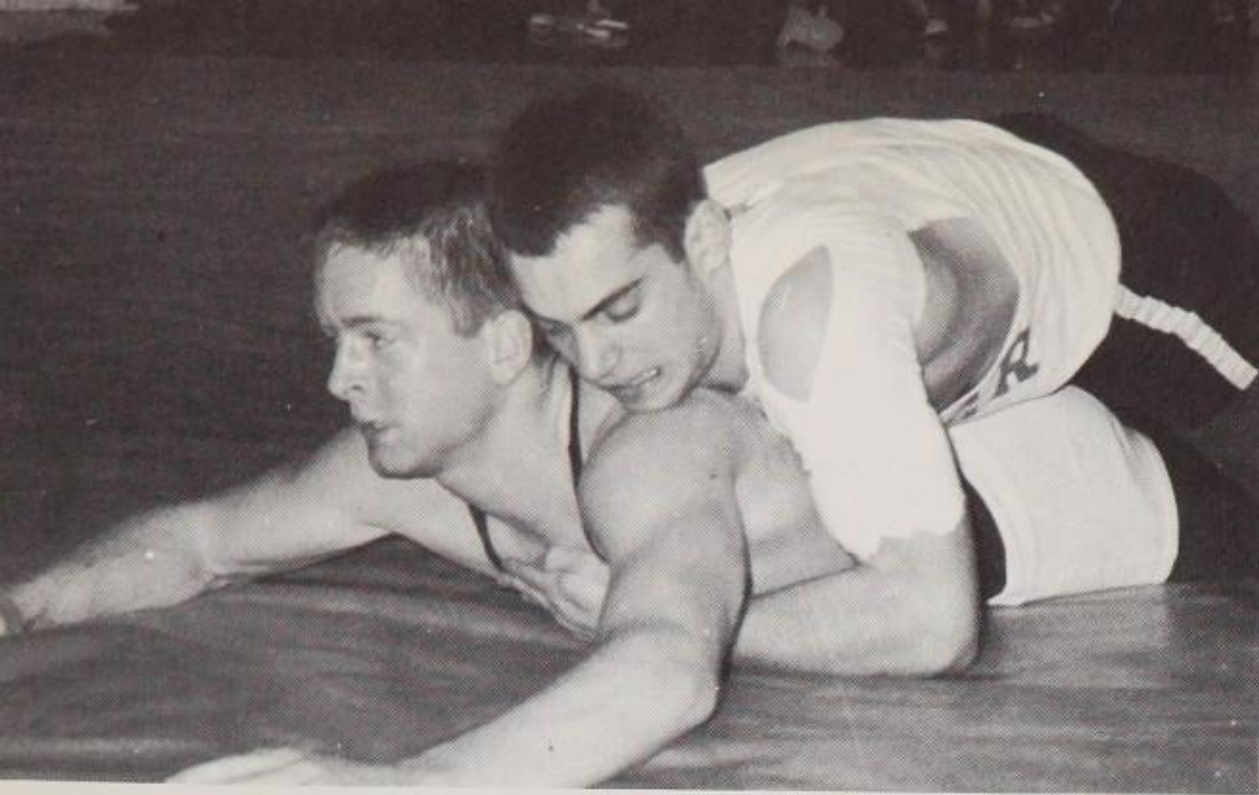

Lower Jack Lewis started the trend of the East Providence meet by pinning his opponent. Four other falls followed, and heavyweight Plimpton finished with a pin in 55 seconds of the first period as Exeter romped, 35-11.

LaSalle Academy, king of Rhode Island wrestling, was the dance weekend opponent. But they came without their four best wrestlers, who were left at home to wrestle the Army plebes.

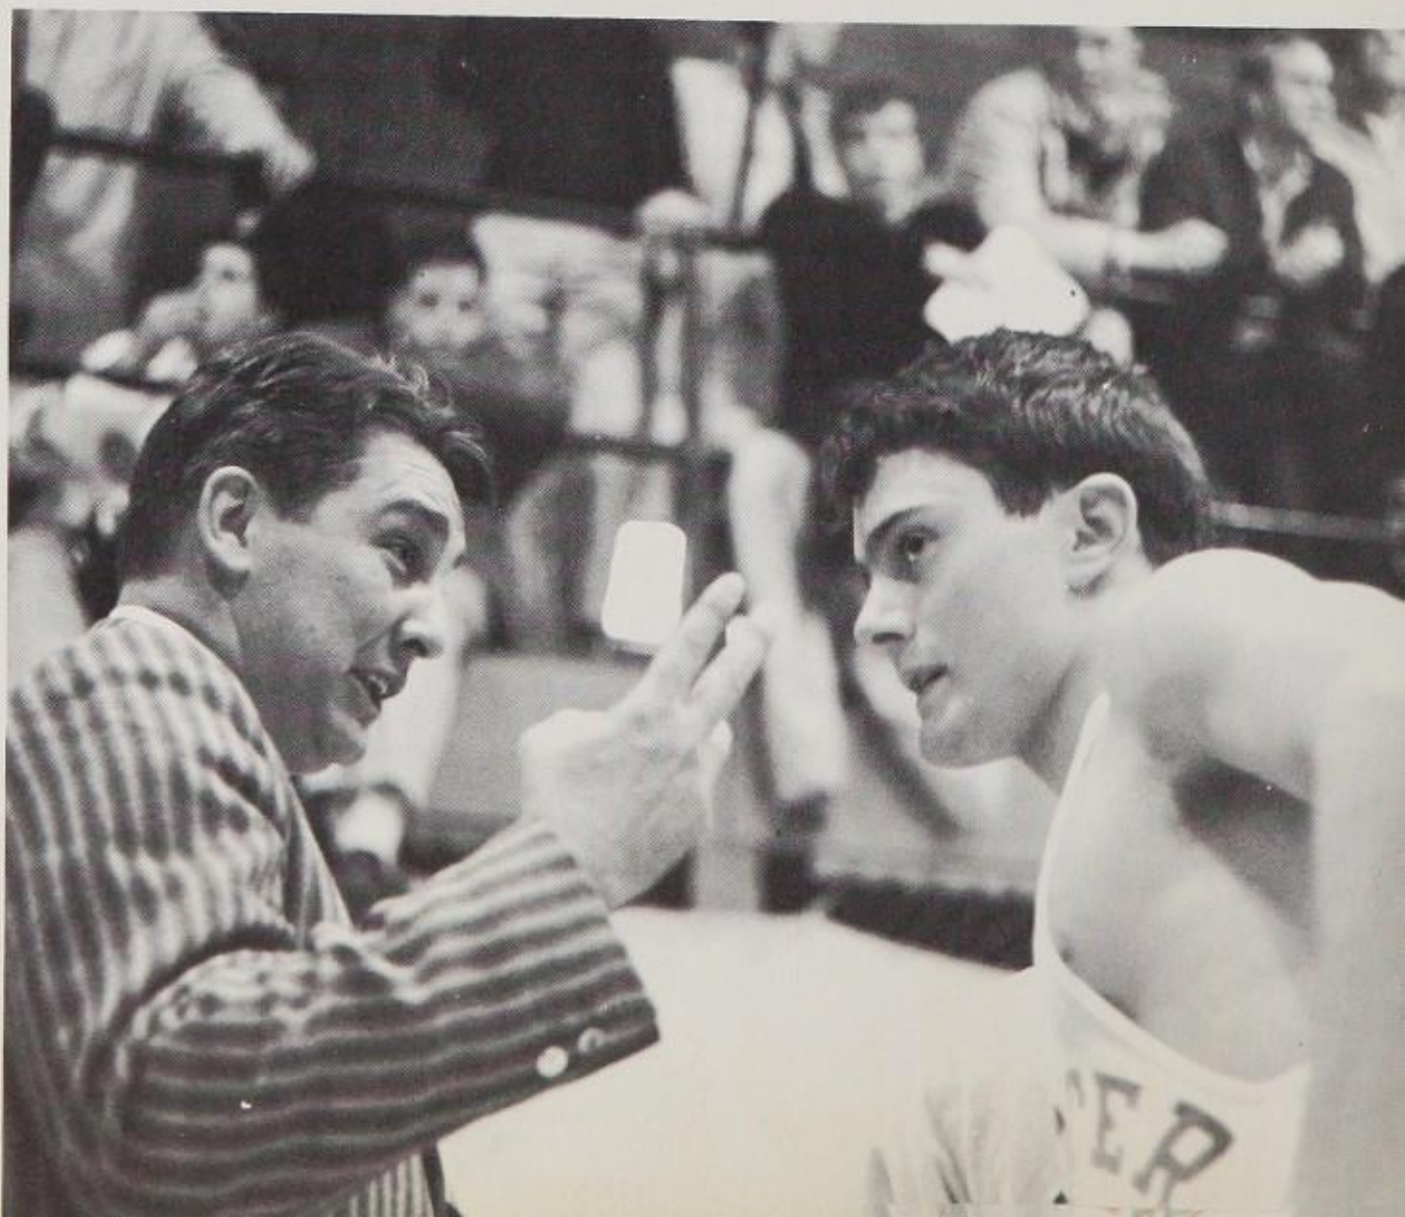

After Lewis had been reversed and pinned, and John Unkovic suffered the same fate, Exeter did not lose a match. 147-pounder Bill Deitrick, Gary Wilson at 177, and Plimpton all gained falls. Al Keck, filling in for McClave, who was out with a separated shoulder, also won decisively in the 39-10 victory.

Milton, Exeter's oldest wrestling rival, had beaten Andover in an earlier meet, and although they had no exceptional wrestlers, it appeared that this would be the first close meet.

But after Larry Palmer beat their captain in the 121-pound class, Milton was broken. PEA took ten decisions and one default for a 35-0 shutout.

The outlook for the climactic Andover meet could not have been better. The Red team was undefeated, and one of its easy victims had handily defeated the Blue.

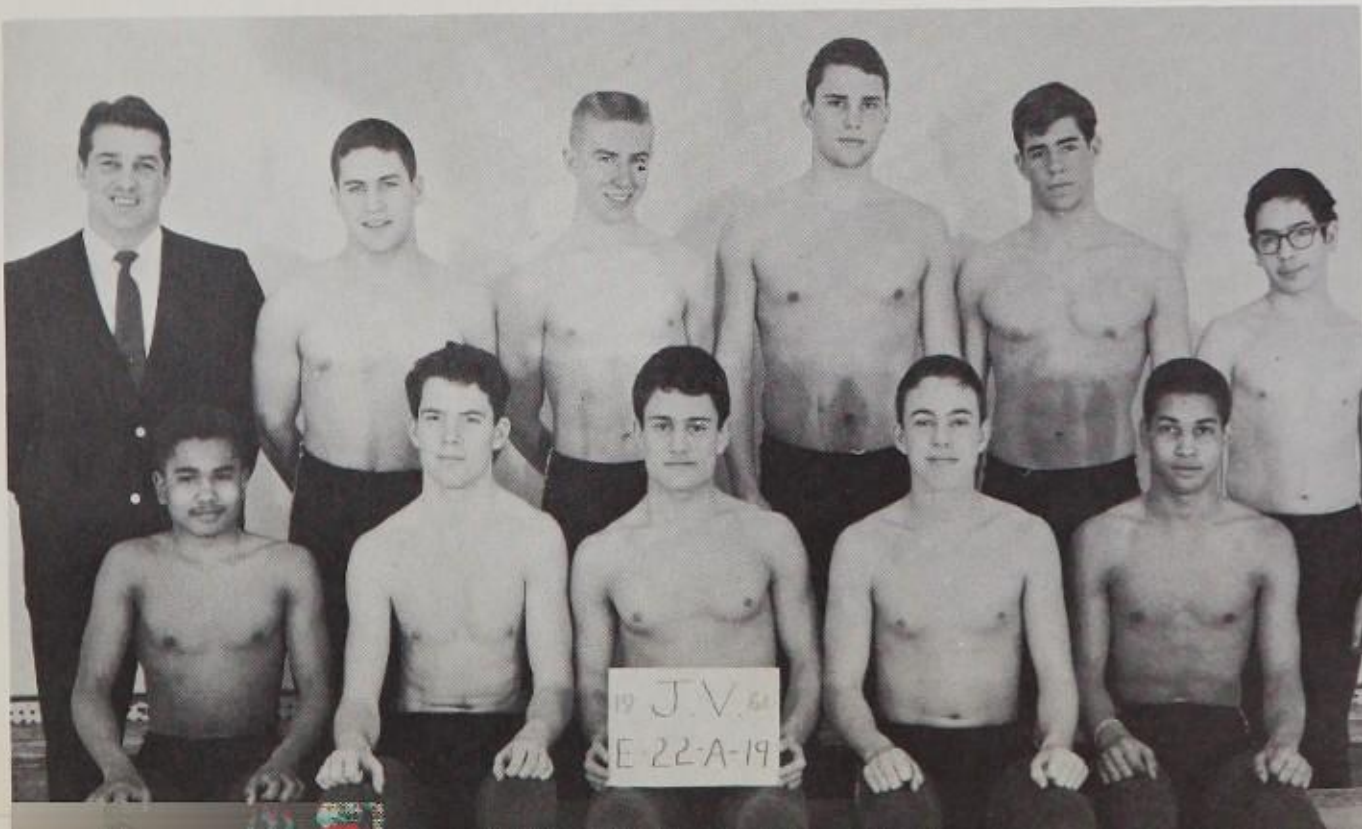

Exeter took an early 14-7 lead, with Lewis, Gutermuth, Irving and McClave taking decisions, Palmer settling for a tie, and Unkovic suffering the only loss. But then, with the stronger PEA weights coming up, the roof fell in.

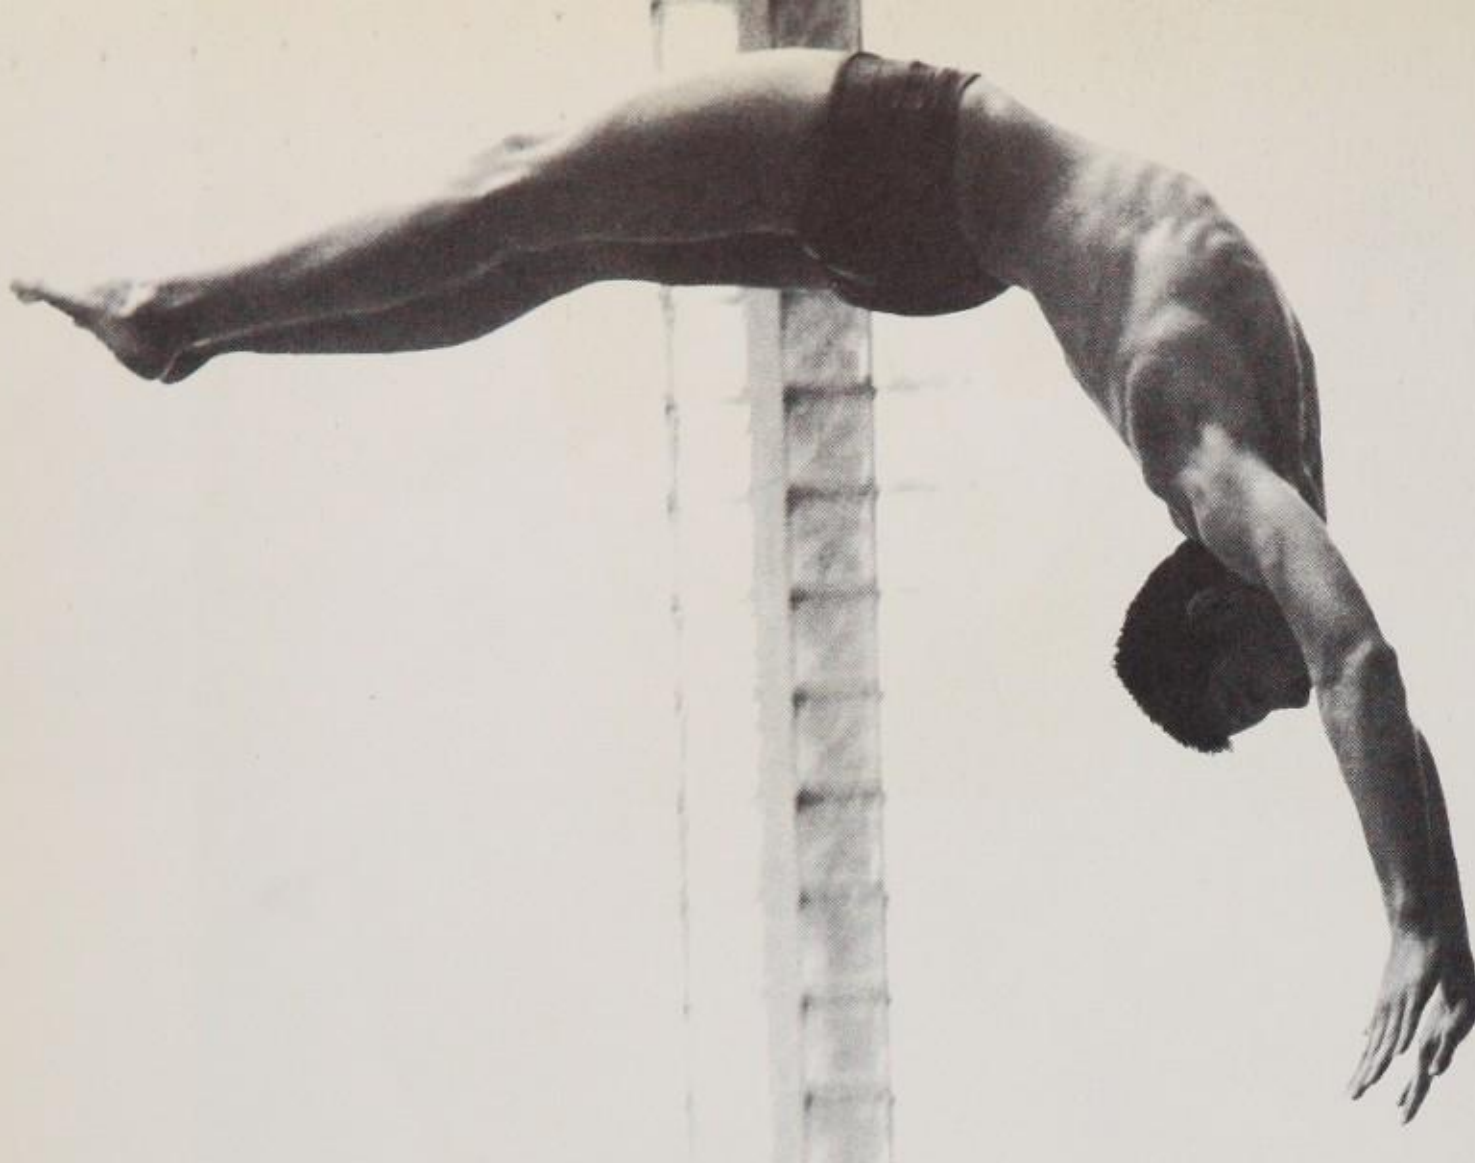

The Red could not win another match; Deitrick drew with a less adept opponent. Art Wheelock, undefeated all year, was pinned, and Jim Flack lost a decision. Then, amid the cheers of Andover partisans, the injured Wilson could not fight off his back, and Andover had clinched the meet. Plimpton followed with an inconsequential tie, but the Blue had snapped Exeter's win streak at seventeen and shattered an undefeated season.

Prospects were good for the Interscholastics the following weekend, but once again misfortune was in store. PEA came in fifth, edging out Andover, but relinquishing the championship. McClave and Plimpton won in their respective divisions, but Palmer failed to make his weight and neither Guthermuth or Irving could make the finals.

SWIMMING

A small number of returning lettermen, aided by a large number of new lowers, put together a 4-3 won-lost record for the swimming team this year. Virtually the entire squad developed well under the guidance of Charles Stephanos, but the squad's careless mistakes and inexperience cost the long-awaited victory over Andover.

Before Christmas Vacation the team smothered the Marblehead Y.M.C.A. in a practice meet. The first weekend of the winter, the M.I.T. Frosh fell victim to Exeter. New boys Tony Doumlele and Steve Teaforde led the way with records in the 100-yard butterfly and the individual medley respectively. Larry Hough and Ward Lamson swept the 200-yard freestyle.

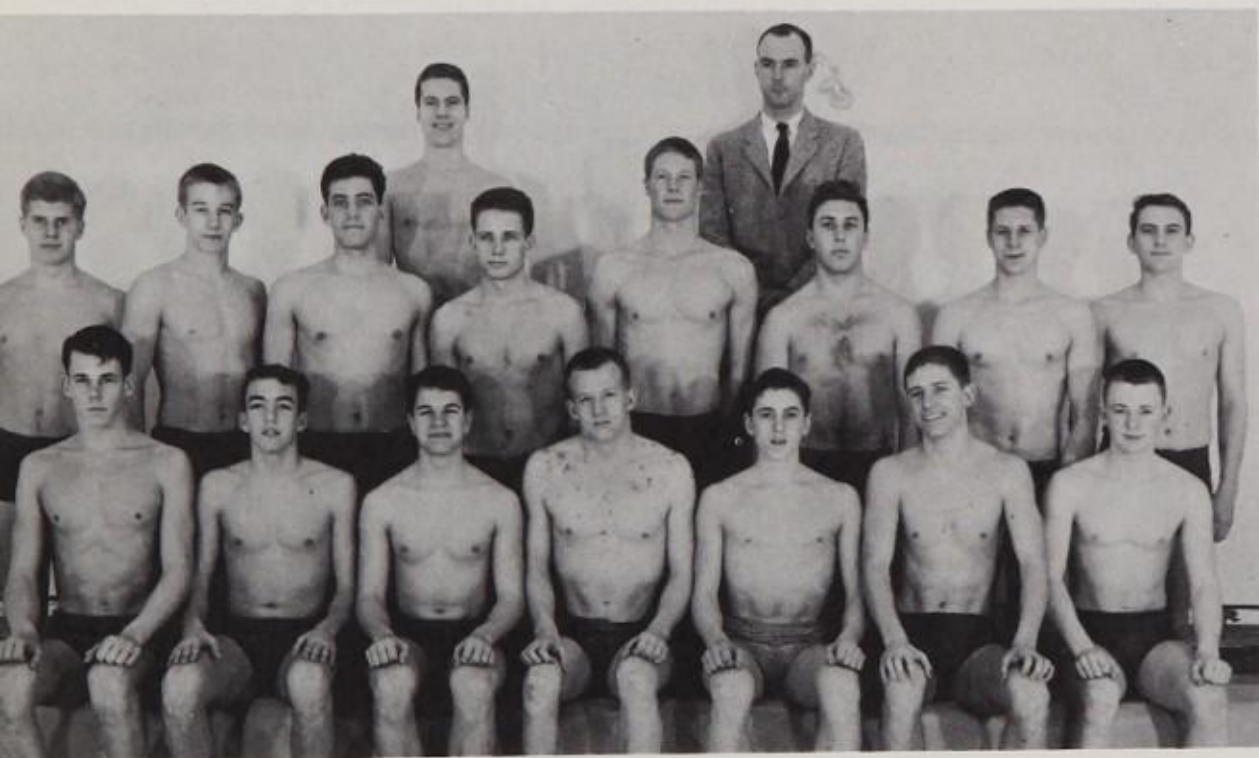

Perennially powerful Deerfield beat Exeter, 50-36, in an away meet, despite a good performance by Bill Kuehn in the 50-yard free style, and a new school medley record by co-captains Bob Dunlop and Gordie Hough, Doumlele, and Kuehn. Bad turns in a strange pool taught Exeter a lesson it should not have forgotten. Portland High, Exeter's next opponent, boasted one good swimmer, but the team proved too strong for the otherwise weak visitors and won 61-25. On dance weekend Exeter trounced the Bowdoin Frosh, 62-33, as Dave Denney and Barry Barnes swept the diving.

Exeter annihilated Mount Hermon next, winning every event. Dunlop turned in his best time of the year in 100-yard backstroke and led the medley relay team to another school record. Exeter fell to the Dartmouth Freshmen, the strongest freshman team in the Ivy League, and then came Andover.

Exeter started off slowly, picking up seconds in the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard butterfly. The team started to come back when Gordie Hough won the breaststroke and Reed Wilson took a third in the same event. Larry Hough and Teaford swept the individual medley, and the relay medley team of Gordie Hough, Dunlop, Doumlele, and Jim Voorhees broke the school and meet records. Exeter was finally ahead, 41-38, going into the final relay. In spite of all the practice since Deerfield, the strange pool again baffled Exeter freestylers, and the Red dropped a heartbreaker, 45-41.

SQUASH

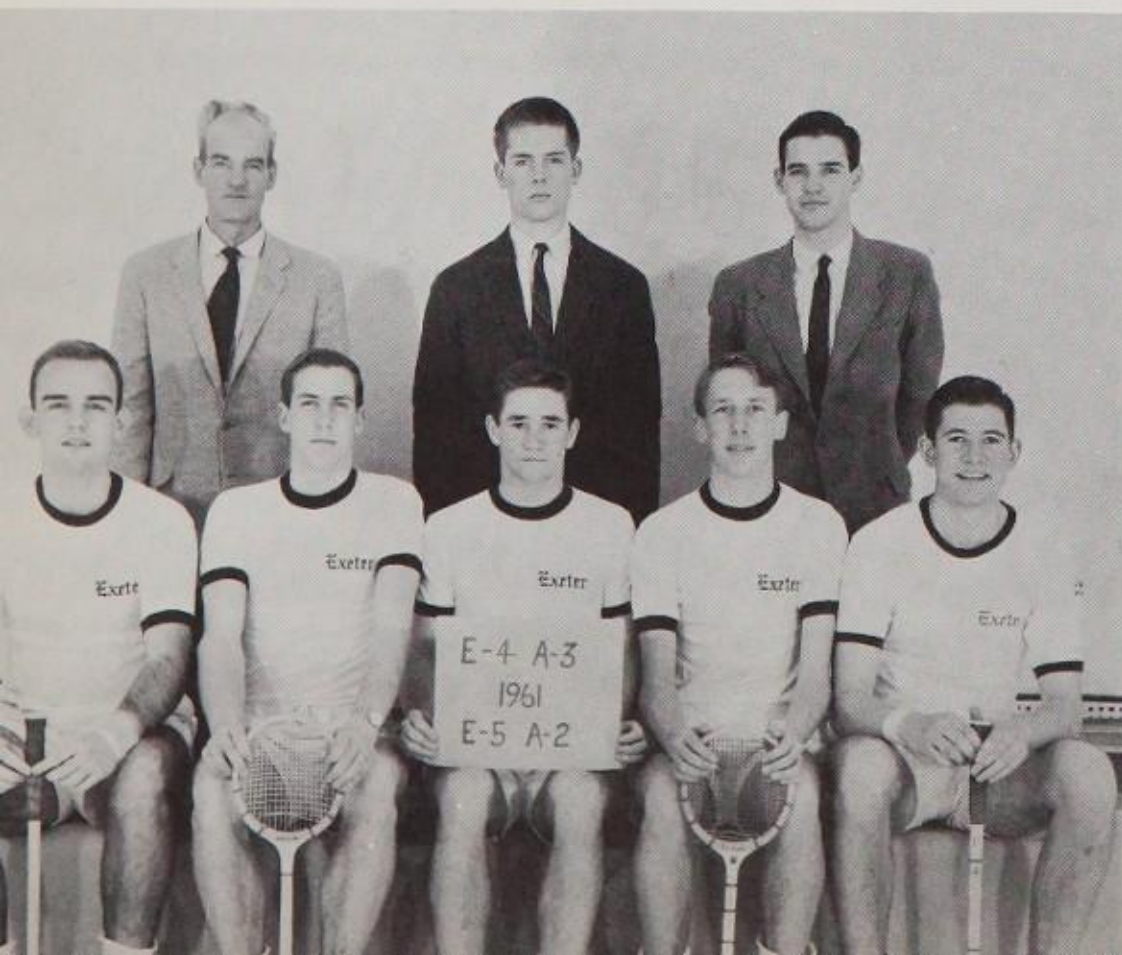

The 1961 Squash Team matched the successful tradition of past years as Captain Frank Satterthwaite led the team through the season with a record of five victories, including both Andover matches, and four defeats.

The team lost the opener to the Harvard Frosh. Denny Lewis defeated his opponent with his usual fast, steady game, to win the only Exeter victory.

Overcoming this initial defeat, Exeter overpowered the M.I.T. freshman, winning every match for its first 5-0 victory. The following week Exeter crowded Andover off their own courts, losing three matches. After a close defeat by Middlesex, Exeter went on to obliterate a weak Brooks team, 5-0.

In the rematch with the Harvard freshmen Exeter was defeated in five close games. Once again Andover lost decisively to the Exeter team. In spite of his crushing power game, Terry Robinson lost to Pete Svastich, Andover's number one player. Satterthwaite easily beat Andover's Skip Cox in three games. Jock Jerrett, Denny Lewis, Stu Rawlings, and Bill Parsons followed suit. Lon Neese, playing number seven, was defeated in an exciting match by Andover's captain, Dick Paine.

ACADEMY SQUASH TEAM — 1st Row: T. Robinson, Rawlings, Satterthwaite, Captain; O. Lewis, Parsons. 2nd Row: Mr. Bennett, Redpath, Mgr.; Mr. Gallwey.

SKIING

The consistency of Captain Chuck Toll, Neale Sweet, and Bayard Kennett helped the Ski Team through a moderately good season. Exeter took the opener against Hebron, with firsts by Toll, Chris Foeger, and Norwegian Finn Wisloff.

The following week St. Paul's was defeated, as the Exeter skiers again finished strong. In a four-way meet at Dublin, the team finished second behind an unusually strong team from Andover, led by Dick Durrance, who took three firsts and a second. Then Yale was defeated, as Foeger took the slalom and the downhill.

Another two weeks went by, and then the team journeyed to Middlebury, Vermont, for the Interschols. The squad got off to a poor start, and as bad accidents started occurring among other competitors, it got even more discouraged. Toll, Sweet and Kennett managed some fair finishes to help Exeter to a seventh out of seventeen.

CHAPLIN-FULTON

Model 57-S

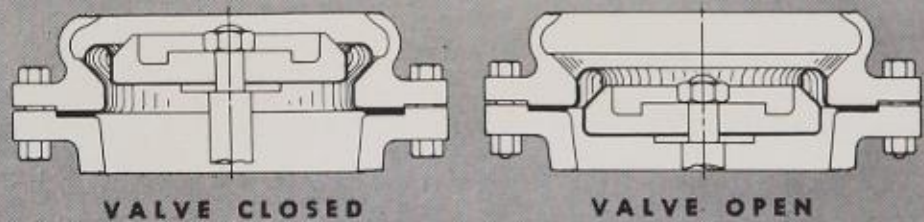

GAS REGULATOR with "ROLL-OUT" Diaphragm for constant pressure control

Chaplin-Fulton Model 57-S is a simple spring loaded regulator which performs like a pilot loaded regulator, without the added complications. For pounds-to-pounds service—inlet pressures to 400 psi—controlled pressures to 75 psi, with deviation through full valve travel less than 1 psi.

NO "FALL-OFF" AS FLOW INCREASES

The drooping characteristics or outlet pressure "fall-off", typical of conventional spring regulators, is eliminated—not by using an uncontrollable velocity effect—but by a new diaphragm design which actually reverses the action of a conventional diaphragm. It changes its area as the valve opens to compensate for the loss in spring loading force.

"ROLL-OUT" DIAPHRAGM PRINCIPLE

Note how, with the valve upwards in the closed position, the diaphragm achieves its maximum effective area—and decreases as the valve opens. The area changes at the same rate as the spring loses compression, to give a constant controlled pressure—determined entirely by valve movement.

TIROS II measures sun's reflected heat while taking pictures of cloud formations.

NASA'S TIROS II — BUILT BY RCA — PROBES MYSTERY OF HOW SUN'S HEAT AFFECTS WEATHER

TIROS II, now in orbit, was designed and built for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration by the same RCA engineers, scientists and technicians who gave America the marvelously successful TIROS I.

In addition to RCA television cameras, the new weather satellite carries sensitive infra-red instruments to measure the temperature of clouds, seas and land masses.

Weather scientists hope that TIROS II's new heat-measuring instruments will help solve the mystery of how the earth uses its "heat budget," received as radiant energy from the sun. A fuller understanding of the sun's effect on weather is expected to greatly improve the accuracy of long-range weather prediction—helping to save lives and property through longer advance warning of dangerous storms.

Project TIROS is sponsored by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The satellites and associated ground equipment were developed and constructed by the Astro-Electronics Division of RCA, under the technical direction of the United States Army Signal Research and Development Laboratory.

RCA skills and ingenuity gave man his first outer-space view of his home planet. These same skills assure the dependability of RCA Victor black-and-white and color television sets, radios, and high-fidelity systems you enjoy in your home.

*N*obody knows how many hundreds of thousands of people will dine tonight with TOWLE Sterling — but the actual number would be startling. For in the two-and-a-half centuries that beautiful silver has been made in Newburyport, the demand for its patterns has moved steadily upward. Craft traditions reaching back almost to the Pilgrims are part of the reason for TOWLE progress, but probably the chief reason is a certain soundness of design — patterns that wear well — that wear so well, in fact, that they become at once a proud possession and a beloved part of family life.

When people begin using a Royal Futura for schoolwork, nice things usually take place: marks go up. You are entitled to know why. Clearer thinking happens, for one thing. Students get to put more brainwork into homework, less into the mechanics of writing it down—for the Futura is the only portable with all the automatic features of those big standard office machines. This typewriter is automatically fast, too—doesn't let rapid-fire thoughts be forgotten before they can get set down. These are just a couple of the reasons why Futuras make many marks of many kids get much better. That would be nice in your house, eh? GEORGE and PHILLIPS

Fashionplates

Noted humorist Ace McFashy sat cross-legged on a ping-pong table in the Wan't Worth chambre de butte, musing. "Ha ha," that was Fwed putting in his two pesetas. Ace looked each of the smiling faces around the table directly in the eye. He concluded that there were four blue eyes, three green eyes, and a pinkeye. He spoke, "There must be a way to get back at them. You know Ursa Major keeps the Bearmobile right outside? Well, we just slip in, take off the emergency brake, roll it to Slyme Street, and on to the Gangrene River."

"But Ace," P. Dogge Lippes spoke, "the Bearmobile is a mack truck."

"So what? We could roll a DC-7 as far as Slyme Street."

"Cool!" Fwed said. "Let's go see if we can find a DC-7." Everyone looked at Fwed so he hid under the table. Moments later, after some careful planning, they set out. They had gone scarcely a hundred yards when they came upon a black knight dressed as a flashlight.

"Hey, what's goin' on?" asked the knight.

"What's the difference between a cigarette machine and a banana?" Ace countered. They reached the bearmobile. Before you could say "flash" the emergency brake was off, and the gross vehicle was rolling towards Slyme Street. What is this we hear? The Grouschenkmobile, and the Restrictomobile — they've surrounded us! (Here follows a fight)

Alas, noted humorist and swashbuckler Ace McFashy is mortally wounded. As Lippes and Fwed kneel over him, he utters his last: "The thing is done now . . . I ebb away, like the evening tide . . . slowly, softly . . . but perhaps the next life will be one big, happy George and Phillips." (adv.)

DIMANCHE

Scene I

(The scene is the football stadium, where three figures are visible, huddled around a dying fire on the twenty yard-line. Close examination reveals them to be none other than Grosse Shote, Sneaks McSleep, and Notte Quicke. Shote is singularly unattractive. He is perhaps six feet tall and weighs close to four hundred pounds, and little of it is muscle. McSleep gives him a run for his money — his only expression brings to mind a cheeseburger, perhaps with onions and a touch of ketchup. He wears on his feet a pair of sneakers that appear to be at least nine years old. A cauliflower is growing out of the left one, and a family of otters inhabits the right one. Quicke, meanwhile, can be characterized only as the epitome of the bright, clean-cut, all-American boy.)

We see them as the fire is about to breathe its last.)*

Shote: Quicke! Go get another tree to throw in the fire. (Quicke rises nimbly, tripping over McSleep.)

McSleep: (This fellow has unfortunately never learned to speak well, and is completely incomprehensible most of the time.) Ar noz gorn fy hub zorp.

Quicke: Uh. (Quicke successfully sidesteps McSleep on a second try, then walks into the woods. He returns shortly with a large oak tree tucked under his arm. He throws it into the fire, which is given new life and burns brightly once more.)

Shote: All right, let's get down to business. We must plan!

Quicke: Plan wha', Grossy?

Shote: The heelerevolution, fool. Do you have the map, Sneaks?

Sneaks: Prb kezl. (He hands Shote a maimed peace of paper.)

Shote: (Reads over the map quickly, then puts it aside. Quicke picks it up and blows his nose on it.) By God, Sneaks, a job well done.

Sneaks: Merci bien e pluribus unum zorp.

Shote: What ho! I hear steps. It must be Barte Arte, traitor, who has joined the ranks of the revolutionaries though a member himself of the Bored. (Sure enough in a moment's time as the crow flies, Barte Arte, traitor in the guise of a gentleman art editor, comes over the rise, carrying a banana and a purple lantern. He trips over McSleep.)

Barte: Say, is that a cheeseburger with onions and perhaps a touch of ketchup I just tripped over?

Shote: No, Barte, it's Sneaks.

Sneaks: (In a tone of affirmation) Zag greal morbut.

Barte: (Laughs) Ah Ah Ah Ah Ah Ah, etc.

Quicke: Hey Barte, why you got a banana and a purple lantern?

Barte: Il faut manger pour vivre.

Shote: Il faut vivre pour manger.

Quicke: La plume de ma tante est sur la table.

Sneaks: (Who speaks an occasional intelligible word) Dimanche.

Shote: (Stands up) We must get down to business! But first, some entertainment. (Shote is joined by Quicke in a short rendition of "We are the Joy Boys of Sickly, Pa." and then reassumes his dignified air.) Tonight is the only night. We must rush them en masse at exactly 8:45. We will be joined by Raleigh, Litre, Toothy, Louis, Belvedere, Runch, and fourteen Patton tanks and a B-52 outside Dvnbar at 8:39. Then we march! (The curtain closes with everyone) joining hands except McSleep, who had sneaked away moments before to buy a cheeseburger.)

Scene II

(We find ourselves on a barren beach. A man, symbolizing Man, is attempting to build a sand castle, but each time he has almost finished it, a large, ugly bird swoops down and completely destroys it.)

Man: Perhaps this time . . . just this once.

Bird: Swoop.

Man: Well, perhaps this next time.

Voice: Never, you fool.

2nd Voice: Such is life.

Drummer Boy: Could I sir, perchance, play for you upon my drum?

Man: Drop dead.

Bird: Swoop.

Man: Drop dead. (The drummer boy plays anyway, and the curtain closes as the man starts again to build his castle.)

Scene III

(The time is a few minutes after nine. Shote alone remains standing in a room which definitely shows the signs of a recent battle. There are fifteen or twenty mangled bodies on the floor and a good deal of blood on the walls. A burning airplane sizzles quietly in a corner.)

Shote: The heelerevolution is a success! Rejoice! But . . . there is no one to rejoice. I alone am left. I alone am the heeler, I alone am the entire Pine. Good Lord!

Drummer Boy: Perchance, sir, I could play for you?

Shote: Can you do "Rhapsody in Blue"?

Boy: Most certainly, sir. (He plays, the sound of the drum quietly resounding through the tired room.)

Shote: That's good. Drums are good. Somehow they are better than men.

Boy: Yes.

Shote: Somehow men are finite and drums are infinite.

Boy: Yes.

Shote: Somehow there is something lovely about a drum. Men are men but drums are not, somehow.

Boy: Yes.

Shote: I could never trust a man. A man is something untrustable. But somehow I could always trust a drum.

Boy: Oh, shut up. (The curtain closes on the final scene as the sun begins to do down. The drummer boy walks quietly away and Shote is left alone again in the bloody office. We catch a glimpse of him as a dove lights on his shoulder and drops a laurel branch down his neck. In the background, we hear the strains of "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and the last image we have is one of the ghost of Ace McFashy, smiling benevolently down on all the world.)

*This is a figure of speech. Fires do not actually breathe, though the consumption of oxygen is as necessary to them as it is to us.

This is a clever little play on words. The word should actually be board but disguise is a good thing and I have my reasons.

This scene is thrown in for a bit of local color. It is meaningless.
